APRIL SALE

Bought your pillows & comforters elsewhere? Guaranteed you overpaid!!!

CAVEAT EMPTOR (BUYER BEWARE)

Don't be misled by advertisements for European goose down comforters at supposedly "SALE PRICES". We'll show you that most of those ads do not represent good values at all. Just because these advertisements are from major departments stores - do not be fooled-all down is not alike.

The quality of goose down is measured in fill power (also know as loft). Fill Power is the amount of cubic inches one ounce of down will fill. Our 800 plus Siberian Goose Down will fill between 800 and 850 cubic inches of space. "The Company Store" catalog always lists the fill power of their goose down. Bring in their catalog and we'll generally save you 50% off their prices.

Goose Down Comforters are an investment, with proper care a fine quality comforter will last a life time. Our high quality 100% cotton shells, or tickings, are divided into baffle boxes. The baffle box has a mesh channel separating the top from the bottom of the comforter. The baffle allows the down to give you maximum loft without collecting in one section of the comforter. We do not cater to the consumer that is more interested in price than quality. Our most valuable asset is our customer. We will only sell a product that we believe to be the highest value at the best price. Cheap low quality down should fill garage cans not pillows and comforters. All our goose down pillows and comforters contain 100% goose down even though it is legal to combine 70% down and 30% feathers and label the item 100% goose down. Remember feathers are those things with quills, down is similar to tiny balls of cotton, absolutely no hard quill. Our goose down comforters and pillows are machine washable because they only contain down.

The larger the individual down cluster the higher the fill power. The higher the fill power the better the comforter will insulate thus providing more comfort to you. Since you are spending 1/3 of your life in bed it should be as luxurious as possible. - Why not?

Saving A Life

A Seal Ashore In East Hampton Has To Be Rescued From The Humans

By Dan Rattiner

It was one of those strange spring days when it's sunny one minute and it's pouring rain the next. The sea would be rough, I knew. I decided to drive down there to have a look.

I was there no more than ten minutes when a woman with two dogs came over. The dogs were huge matching greyhounds. Must have cost a fortune.

"Do you have a cell phone?" The woman asked.

"Yes."

"There's a seal on the beach about a mile down, just east of the town beach pavilion."

"They often come up to rest awhile."

"I called the police. That was ten minutes ago. They haven't come, and the dogs were beginning to scare it. Somebody has to do something and I can't wait any longer. I have guests coming."

And she hopped in her Porsche and was gone.

I was at the beach in East Hampton they call Highway Behind the Pond just to the west of the Maidstone Club. Main Beach is about a mile from here. What if the seal was hurt? I took out my cell phone and called the seal rescue service in Riverhead.

A woman named Kelly answered.

"Have you SEEN the seal?" she asked.

"No."

"Can you go down there and call me back? See if it has stripes on it, how big it is, whether it seems to be in pain and if there is blood anywhere."

There are two ways to get to Main Beach from Highway Behind the Pond. The long way is to leave the beach and go around the pond. This was about three miles. The short way is to put the car in four wheel drive and go down the beach. This would be about one mile. I started the car up, shifted into gear and went out on the sand. Immediately I saw I had made a mistake. The tide was high and there is a place where the beach narrows about halfway between Maidstone and Main. This was now so awash with the surf I would not be able to get through. Furthermore, it had begun to rain again, softening the sand.

I stopped the car and was about to turn around when I saw a couple walking toward me. The man had a pony tail and wire rimmed sunglasses with the little round dark lenses. I looked over toward them and, in spite of the rain, rolled down the window.

"Did you pass a seal on the beach?" I asked.

"Why don't you WALK down the beach and look for yourself," the man said. He then linked arms with his girl and walked on.

I'm the seal rescue police patrol, I wanted to say, but didn't. He'd probably have me arrested and charged with impersonating an officer. Best not to pursue this.

I was starting to turn around, thinking maybe my beach driving sticker had expired and I better look into it when a second woman came running over to the car, waving her hand over her head.

"There's a seal barking on the beach. I think it's injured. It's trying to crawl up the back of the beach into the dunes."

To die? is what I thought.

"I'll take you to him," she said, getting in the car. "I'll show you where he is. And my husband is over there."

She pointed to where a man was standing staring out to sea.

The three of us took the long way around the pond to Main Beach. On the way, I phoned Kelly again and she said there were two people from the rescue service in the area and she would have them call me on the cell phone and I could guide them in. Almost immediately the phone rang.

What a strange arrangement for an animal. The front end looked like a polar bear, all friendly and cuddly but you better stay away.

South O' the Highway (and North, too)

Cheryl Gordon, widow of New York real estate developer Ed Gordon, has put 147 acres of farmland north of the Highway up for sale for $23.5 million. The acreage can be subdivided into 33 building lots. She is not putting on the market the couple's 28,000 square foot mansion or the 9 hole golf course that her husband built on their property.

Reporting the news (via television) can be a difficult field to try and get into. Looks count and grace under pressure are very important to have. But...the payoff is just that – a pay off that's worth it. Ask Hamptonites Peter Jennings whose annual salary is $8 million and Tom Brokaw who pulls in $7 million a year. How did that song go? Oh yes...nice work if you can get it....

Eileen and Richard Ekstract will host the 2nd Annual Pony Awards benefit for Maryhaven Center of Hope, on Saturday, June 23, at their magnificent Sagaponack home. The event, chaired by Dan Rattiner, Cat Squires and Joan and John Gruen and Wilbur Ross will honor Muriel Siebert, the first woman of Wall Street. For reservations & information call Linda B. Shapiro at 329-5480

Here's what our latest patients are saying....

• When I first went to see you about having my eyes done, I told you my greatest desire was to be able to enjoy theatre again by seeing the faces of people on stage. This week I have been to two events, less than two weeks after my surgery, and that wish has been granted.....

Robert Barandes
Attorney at Law

• I must admit that I was somewhat apprehensive about the final outcome of the surgery, I am very glad I had it done. Now I realize with great happiness that this was the right choice for me. The old fear of losing my eyesight or having complications because of it, seem very laughable now.
As a patient and psychologist I want you to know that your professionalism, reassurance and caring before, during and after the surgery are greatly appreciated. Besides being a physician you are a true gentleman. You can be sure that I will recommend you enthusiastically to anyone who talks to me about LASIK surgery.

Dr. Marie A. Carrese
Counseling Psychology

• You couldn't get the smile off my face, waking up and able to see without the aid of glasses or contacts. I was very pleased with Dr. Ricci and his staff for making one feel at ease and being so confident going through the procedure

Richard T. Hodson
Visual Manger

"This is Shawn Keenan," the voice on the other end said. "From Riverhead Marine Rescue. I'm coming into East Hampton from the east, from Amagansett. I just passed Town Hall."

I gave them directions, then hung up.

Ten minutes later, a white Jeep Cherokee pulled up alongside me at Main Beach. It had two signs on the side. One read THE RIVERHEAD FOUNDATION FOR MARINE RESEARCH AND PRESERVATION. The other read VEHICLE PROVIDED BY GARSTEN MOTORS.

Two people got out. Both wore bright red jackets that read THE RIVERHEAD FOUNDATION FOR MARINE RESEARCH AND PRESERVATION on them. They were a blond woman and a man with long curly hair and a beard. Kim Dunham and Shawn Keenan. The Seal Swat Team.

Shawn came over to our car and introduced himself. "What have we got?" he asked.

The five of us, single file safari fashion, Shawn and Kim leading the way, took a path up the back of a sand dune toward the beach. The seal was not hard to find. There was already a small crowd of five people, three summer people and two surfers, standing around in the rain looking at this strange animal lying quietly on the beach. It was grey and white, had big beautiful black eyes and long whiskers, fur and fins. As we approached it raised its head, showed its teeth and growled like a dog.

"Not too close," Shawn said.

But Shawn got close. He stood at the front of the animal, stared down at it, and took out a cell phone. The animal not only growled and bared its teeth but now opened its mouth and lunged at him. But it was not much of a lunge. The whole back end of his body was just too heavy to move easily and it just lay there while the front end lunged.

The man who had come with the woman turned to me.

"I was in New Zealand three days ago and we took a boat trip the highlight of which was seeing a seal."

"Milford Sound?" I asked.

He looked at me warily. "Yes," he said.

"Been there," I said.

Not much happened for the next five or ten minutes. Shawn talked on his cell phone, then he talked to the seal. The seal made it clear Shawn was to come no closer or he'd bite Shawn's leg off. The drizzle stopped.

I kept looking at this cute seal, which was about the size of a black lab, and these are the thoughts that went through my mind.

What a strange arrangement for an animal. The front end looked like a polar bear, all friendly and cuddly but you better stay away. The back end, however, made no sense. It had a big thick tail, and two back legs that just stuck straight out framing the tail and seemed they might have some use splashing and propelling the seal forward through the water. There were front fins, not arms. And the only way this thing could move along out of the water — well — imagine a person lying on their belly in the sand with their legs tied together and their arms tied together behind their back. They could move slowly along, but it would be with great effort by scrunching and rocking their body back and forth.

Thus it was that the seal could move. And it seemed to want to move away from the beach, up the dune. This would never work. As the dune got steeper the effort required would be greater. Finally all it would do was slide back down.

The swans on the pond in town, even with just two feet, have a much better arrangement, I thought. Webbed feet for swimming. Toes, feet and legs for walking along. Beaks for pecking. That was more like it.

Shawn was hanging up the cell phone.

"Get the towel from the car," he said to Kim. "And the big piece of plywood." She left.

"We're going to try to urge him back into the water," he said. "He seems healthy. Its a rough sea, but he should be able to deal with it."

"Why don't you just leave him?" the man who had been to New Zealand asked.

"Because people might bother him. Somebody could get bit. Somebody might try to take him home as a pet." I found that hard to believe, but, knowing New Yorkers, I could believe it. "Healthy seals do come up on the beach to sun themselves," he said. "And this one does look healthy. But I can't be sure. And if it isn't we can help him."

"How?" the man asked.

"We'll put him in the car, take him to the Aquarium, in Riverhead, feed him fish for a month or two, then set him free."

The woman returned with the towel and the plywood. It was about two feet by four. Shawn took the plywood and stuck it vertically into the

Cyber Spielberg

Cyberthief Plays Fast And Loose With Martha Stewart, Steven Spielberg, Carl Ichan, Etc.

By Dan Rattiner

It is amazing what lengths some people will go to to rub shoulders with the rich and famous, particularly those who have the big summer homes out in the Hamptons.

Take Abraham Abdallah, for example. At 31, he was a busboy at a restaurant in Brooklyn. He had few prospects. But he'd seen the famous actors and actresses on TV, had read about some of the big billionaires with homes in the Hamptons, and he thought he'd like to involve himself in their lives somehow. They wouldn't even have to know about it.

Perhaps most amazing about what he did, and it involved millions and millions of dollars coming his way, is that he did not change his lifestyle. He continued to live a quiet, ordinary life, coming to work every day from the apartment in Brooklyn where he lived with his parents. Sometimes he bussed the tables. Sometimes he worked the dishwasher. But he had a secret. And their names were Martha Stewart, Steven Spielberg, George Soros, Warren Buffett, Carl Ichan, Michael Bloomberg, Sumner Redstone and many, many others. He knew them intimately, as few others do. And he kept this little secret to himself, for very near a year, as he quietly went about raiding their bank accounts.

It all began with Abdallah going to the main branch of the Brooklyn Library to use the computers. He fooled around a bit, then decided to see if he could read about any of the rich and famous. He did a search. There were lots of magazine articles he could read, lots of streaming video and photographs. But there were also sites he could go to, fan clubs and so forth, where he could get more detailed information about some of these people. He got an idea.

Two weeks later Abdallah returned home and took up to his room some stationery he had printed up, some rubber stamps and some envelopes. He also had with him a copy of the current edition of Forbes magazine that featured the nation's richest people, in descending order. He sat down. The richest person in the country, he saw, was Bill Gates up in Seattle, Washington. Pretty far away. And too obvious. He looked at numbers two, three, four and on and on down the list.

Ultimately [The New York City Police] realized they were dealing with the most complicated cyber-scam they had ever encountered.

What Abdallah did over the next month, using the stationery he had made up, the rubber stamps and the information he was able to access at the Brooklyn Library, was to send forged faxes to some of the major credit bureaus in the country – TRW, Equifax, Experian and several others – requesting detailed credit reports on some of these wealthy people. The requests seemed to have come from some of the big New York brokerage houses – Bear Stearns and Merrill Lynch for example – for that is the stationery he had made up and stamped official with his rubber stamp — but the need for the information was pressing according to the requests, and so it should be sent by e-mail. Send it to lt265@yahoocom. That would be the best way. The information got sent.

At this point, Abdallah had the credit card numbers, the dates of birth, addresses, many of the bank account numbers, social security numbers, mothers' maiden names and relatively complete asset and financial trading information of some of the wealthiest men in America.

Next, Abdallah, still working out of his bedroom, began to create clones of some of these rich people. For Paul Allen, one of the founders of Microsoft, for example, Abdallah set up an actual, though virtual, office in Los Angeles. The office consisted of a cell phone with a Los Angeles area code, a voice answering machine that said, "This is Paul Allen and I'm away from my desk please leave a message," and a post office box with a forwarding address. All were paid for with Paul Allens credit cards. And the person accessing the messages on the Paul Allen telephone was, of course, Abdallah, using a second cell phone to call the first cell phone and order the messages retrieved.

The final bit of work Abdallah did was to rent some mailboxes near his home at 29 John Street. One was rented in the name of Paul Allen, for example, the rent paid by a valid Paul Allen credit card as read over the telephone. The caller could give the last four digits of his social security number. Also his mother's maiden name. It was fine.

At this point, Abdallah began ordering things from catalogues, not big things, but little things, and having them delivered to the boxes at 29 John Street. The UPS would arrive, there'd be nobody there, and UPS would take the package back to UPS headquarters nearby where, as a regular service, they hold packages they cannot deliver for about a week. It was at the UPS headquarters where the packages are picked up that, eventually, the authorities were able to catch Abraham Abdallah.

How it all came to this was because of something Abdallah had no way of knowing about. This was two months ago. Abdallah had begun to get bolder and order bigger things. An email order had come in to Merrill Lynch instructing that $10 million be transferred from an account owned by millionaire Thomas Seibel, founder of Seibel Systems, to an account also owned by Thomas Seibel in Australia. The order "unbalanced" where certain Seibel monies were supposed to be kept. Merrill Lynch looked into it. And they looked into it. And they were amazed.

As the size and complexity of this business became apparent, the New York City Police Department assigned ever more police officers to investigating this case. Ultimately, they realized they were dealing with the most complicated cyberscam they had ever encountered. They called in the Feds. And when they caught Abdallah, accepting from UPS a package containing credit card magnetizing equipment, they went public with it. It is quite a story. And Abdallah is now in jail, awaiting trial.

It is amazing just how much of our personal information is easily available on the internet. In fact, much of what we give out over the phone or on a form — to get a mortgage, or to lease a car — is SOLD to somebody who can use it to get what they want from us, whether we like it or not.

There are laws against this, of course, but there are loopholes. For example, here is a letter I got from Key Leasing, the company that I thought had need of my personal information just so they could approve my new car lease. Key was writing me because, apparently, they had been chastised by the government. They were letting me know I could "opt out" of their selling the information I had given them. Sort of. Here are excerpts from this letter, much of which was in small print. Even if I "opt out," they can still sell the information about me anyway. Read.

"At KeyCorp, we recognize that privacy is a very sensitive and important matter. We are providing the enclosed policy to you, as required by law and regulation, regarding our information practices. Key adheres to strict standards of security, confidentiality and privacy with regard to consumer information. If you are comfortable with Key's handling of information we collect, you do not need to take any action at this time.

"PROTECTING THE PRIVACY INFORMATION: We disclose information to nonaffiliated third parties... so that they may offer you additional products and services we believe are beneficial to you. These third parties include...non-financial companies, such as retailers (and) others...

"YOUR OPTIONS: If you prefer that Key not share information about you, you may 'opt out' of information sharing with unaffiliated third party companies.... (But) even if you 'opt out,' we may still continue to share information with our marketing partners and with other nonaffiliated third parties as permitted by law. (Italics added.)

Wanna Have Dinner Guests? Get A Permit. And Only One Dinner Per Year Please

By Dan Rattiner

Many years ago, the manager of the Royal Atlantic Motel in Montauk told me the story of a guest who woke him up in the middle of the night to complain that the noise of the ocean was keeping him up. Wasn't there something he could do? Weren't there town ordinances against such a noise?

The problem was solved by giving this guest a room that did not face out on the ocean. It was a back room. It faced a garage. The guest slept peacefully the rest of the night.

This brings us to the present day where there is more lunacy involving a town ordinance. Although this time the lunacy is that the ordinance exists rather than not exist.

I refer to a new ordinance that limits parties, gallery openings and fundraisers. I have always thought that the more of these the merrier. I thought the whole idea was to increase the merriness in our lives. But no.

The situation is now completely out of control in the Town of East Hampton. I warned them ten years ago when they started out wading into these waters. They had passed a law requesting that people get a permit for any mass gathering on their property in excess of 50 people. This is America, I reminded them in an article I wrote at the time. People may not be allowed to gather without permission in other countries, but in America, it's legal. They even call it that. Freedom of Assembly.

The response I got, which never quite satisfied me, was that they were aware of that and so the permits would be free and furthermore they would not refuse anyone getting one. All they wanted was to know where the parties were so they could coordinate having the police in the area, monitoring parked cars and keeping the traffic moving and so forth. Strictly from that perspective, I noted, I guess that was okay.

But watch out.

Keep in mind here that we are not talking about issuing permits for a mass gathering in a public space. That, I believe, certainly should be at least regulated by the authorities. I am talking about what people do on private property, where a man's home is his castle. There are those who might not invite anybody over ever. And there are those who have a party every other night. America blesses them all. It's the law.

People may not be allowed to gather without permission it other countries, but in America it's legal.

Well, here it is 2001 and now East Hampton is talking about how many "gatherings" a person should be allowed to have on private property in the course of a year. Figure a husband, a wife, ten kids, all with birthdays, coming out parties, slumber parties, graduation parties, engagement parties and so forth. This is not a cause for joy. It's a problem.

Give them a finger and they take the hand. Last year, they expanded their "mass gathering" law to include private commercial properties as well as private residential properties.

This year they are talking about a maximum of six, or maybe eleven parties per property. The rest of the year, presumably, people are supposed to sit around a table in the dark being very quiet. The Town Board has long since forgotten this law was passed for information gathering purposes only.

The thing is, we have noise ordinances, parking, occupancy, drug, alcohol and traffic ordinances, all designed to mute the hoopla. And if things get really out of hand we have disturbing the peace which includes the ability of hauling people off to jail. These are the tools that the Constitution and the State of New York give us. We are supposed to use them.

Where has all this gone wrong?

"Of course I feel sorry for the various brides and grooms," one of the councilmen told Don Torr, who during the summer on many occasions erects a tent on the lawn of his Montauk resort to conduct weddings. "I may be willing to allow six weddings. But certainly not fifteen."

How can they even talk like this?

Torr was at the Town meeting because every year he has about fifteen weddings he caters at the resort. As he pointed out, last year the expanded "mass gathering" ordinance kind of ran right up against his weddings, most of which are planned a year in advance. He had had fifteen weddings in 2000. So in 2000 he came in to Town Hall and applied for permits for 15 weddings in 2001. The Town Clerk told him he couldn't apply for the permits a year ahead.

"It was a Catch 22," he said. "And I didn't know what to do. So I just went ahead and took deposits and booked fifteen like I always do," he said. "So I hope whatever we work out for these people trying to get married won't result in their filing lawsuits."

No decision was made, but before the meeting broke up, the talk turned to social gatherings at which money was raised. There was a plan to hold a tennis tournament at the East Hampton Tennis Club out by the airport. It would raise $10,000 or more for charity. With the new law, it would need a Mass Gathering Permit. Was there a problem with that?

"My feeling is, as grateful as I am when people contribute to charity, I really don't want to figure charity into my thinking about mass gathering permits," said Concilman Hammerle.

He said he was inclined to vote against the tennis tournament.

Which leads me to my idea about a plot for a new Neil Simon play. Neil Simon has not had a hit on Broadway lately. So here's the plot outline.

The first act takes place in a courtroom. The Judge is speaking.

"So that is that," the Judge says. "It may be a fascist law, but that's philosophy. The law is the law and you have broken it by having more than one fundraiser."

"If we can only have one fundraiser," says Marty Richards, a famous and well to do partygiver, "why did Ronald Reagan institute the trickle down theory? Public funds for the disadvantaged were cut back. The baton was passed to the rich. And we give and give. But how can we trickle down with only one fundraiser?"

"You figure it out," the Judge says, banging his gavel. "Case closed. Lock 'em up."

The second act is a party scene, taking place on the lawn of a home in East Hampton. There are thousands of people because this is the only party allowed that year.

"Where's the permit? The cops are here."

"I thought you had the permit."

On stage, an auctioneer is selling off a pair of earmuffs once worn by Ralph Lauren. The auction will benefit the East Hampton Day Care Center.

"I have a thousand dollars. Do I hear a thousand five?"

Along the perimeter of the property, there are plates all displayed on a table, painted by artists and other dignitaries to raise money for the Retreat.

On a table is a huge jar. A sign on it says SOUTHAMPTON HOSPITAL, PUT MONEY HERE. And at that moment several dozen people wearing baseball uniforms trot in.

"We're the Artist-Writers Baseball Game," Lief Hope says. "Where are we supposed to play?"

Michael Bolton is up on one stage singing songs to raise money for the Amagansett Marine Museum. And Tina Turner is belting things out on another stage for the Animal Rescue Fund. A bar mitzvah boy waits in the wings.

Suddenly, a bunch of brides and grooms appear, looking to find, amidst the veils and top hats, the member of the opposite sex they are there to marry.

A policeman arrives. He looks at his watch.

Party's over, he says. Thank you everybody.

Everybody files out, and as they do they bump into all these people filing in who are wearing red. It is Marty Richards' Red Ball, moved to East Hampton, here to raise money for the Marty Richards Legal Fund.

Are we too late? somebody asks. •

The Seventy-Three Cent Theft, A Bribe, And Send Somebody Out To Subpoena That Dog

By Dan Rattiner

Two interesting judicial decisions came down in our community last week. One of them, a Long Island story, involved seventy three cents and a dog. The other, a Southampton story, involved a man who admitted to offering an official a $5,000 bribe and subsequently got a judge to sign off on an arrangement to award him $100,000 for pain and suffering. Thus goes the legal system in these parts.

First the Long Island story. A man parks his car with a big dog in it in a shopping center parking lot in Brentwood. The man gets out of his car, goes into a Safeway Supermarket and while he is shopping sees somebody trying to do something to the passenger window of his car. He calls the Safeway manager. The manager calls the police who come and arrest the man by the car.

This was three years ago. Three years later, last month, a trial takes place to determine the guilt or innocence of the man by the car. The man says he was trying to jimmy open the window of the car just a little bit so the dog inside, a big 150 pound Rotweiler, could get some air. The man inside the Safeway says the intent was auto theft, and in the absence of an actual auto theft because they got there before it happened, robbery. There had been seventy-three cents on the passenger's seat of the car. He had told the police about it. When they got the man handcuffed, though he didn't have that exact amount in change on him, the money was gone. In fact the police made the arrest based upon this accusation.

The trial lasted two days and by some calculations cost us taxpayers about $35,000. But, as the prosecutor said, seventy three-cents is seventy three cents. It could have been seventy three dollars or seventy-three hundred dollars. It was all the same in the eyes of the law.

He charged slander and libel, malicious prosecution, mental anguish and shame over a deed he had not been found guilty of.

The defense lawyer said the only reason the man in the supermarket had made such a big scene about all of this was because he wanted to file a lawsuit against the owners of the parking lot for poor security measures. There was insurance money to be made. Instead, they arrested an innocent man and, because it had gotten that far, falsely accused him of stealing the seventy-three cents. To prove it, they served a summons on the dog. Let the jury decide if anyone in their right mind would try to get into a car being guarded by this very large and intimidating Rotweiler.

The judge allowed the summons to be served on the dog. But he stopped short of allowing the dog to be brought into the courtroom. For the safety of those in the courtroom, he ordered that just a picture of the dog be brought in. The jury could decide for itself if the man had car theft in his mind.

The jury looked, went into seclusion for three hours, and then returned a verdict of not guilty on the car theft and breaking and entering charges, but no decision, because of a legal technicality, on whether or not the man had stolen the seventy-three cents. The judge then ruled that this charge could be dismissed in exchange for the time served, which, because the man had been unable to make bail, was ninety-one days.

The Southampton story begins right about the same time as the seventy-three cents and the dog story when a businessman named Eric Ferrara makes an application to build a steel tower on a hill in Noyac so he can rent out space to telephone, radio, television and internet services. Ferrara's company, Vertical Broadcasting, presents the application to the Southampton Town

Board because that is the Town which the hamlet of Noyac is in.

Apparently, however, some hanky panky went on amongst the businessman and the politicians prior to the vote, which was postponed and then, finally, indefinitely postponed.

Soon after that, Mr. Ferrara was arrested, and charged with trying to bribe members of the board so they would vote in favor of Vertical Broadcasting. There were petitions filed, depositions and statements taken, and finally, two years later, a trial, at which Mr. Ferrara turned the tables. He was acquitted of all charges and walked away a free man. Six months after that, he filed a $10 million federal lawsuit against the town and against two of the councilmen. The results of that became known last week.

Who exactly did what to whom is not completely clear, but there are some facts that everyone agrees upon. Three councilmen, Pat Heaney, Steve Halsey and Vincent Cannuscio, who is also Town Supervisor, did go to the police before the scheduled vote to say that it was their belief that Mr. Ferrara wanted to bribe them to get them to vote for his application. The police called in the Feds, and the Feds persuaded both Mr. Cannuscio and Mr. Halsey to wear recorders strapped to their chests under their shirts for future meetings with Mr. Ferrara. This they did. After one of these meetings, Mr. Ferrara admits that he did leave $5,000 in cash in envelopes in the back seat of Mr. Halsey's car to help persuade him of the rightness of the Vertical Broadcasting cause.

Upon going out to his car, however, Mr. Halsey saw the cash and immediately took it to the police. He and Mr. Cannuscio also turned in their tape recorders, the contents of which were also available in the courtroom. Mr. Ferrara, if convicted, might go to jail for twenty years.

Mr. Ferrara's defense in the case, however, was that he was coerced into offering the bribe. The voices on the tape, Mr. Ferrara's lawyer pointed out, were that of not only Mr. Ferrara, but also Mr. Cannuscio and Mr. Halsey, duly elected officials. If you listened to the tape carefully, and his lawyer said you had to listen very carefully, it was clear that the two officials were not being offered a bribe, but were REQUESTING a bribe. Maybe it was ambiguous. Listen to the tapes again. If there was ANY ambiguity, you could not convict Eric Ferrara. The jury voted not guilty. Eric Ferrara went free.

But then, of course, he sued. He charged slander and libel, malicious prosecution, mental anguish and shame over a deed he had been found not guilty of. For that, and for the legal expenses he had incurred to defend himself, he wanted ten million dollars. He wanted this to be borne not only by the Town, but also by Mr. Cannuscio and Mr. Halsey as public officials and also as individuals.

Last week, as this matter wended its way toward a courtroom showdown, the parties involved announced that they had reached a settlement in the case, after which they petitioned, and got, a judge to agree on the terms.

Mr. Ferrara got $100,000.

"We believe the settlement is in the best interest of the citizens of the town," said Town Attorney Richard Gilmartin. "In the worst case scenario, the liability to the town ($10 million) could have been much worse."

Cases closed. Woof. •

Tiger, Stuck With The Wrong Golf Ball, Fends Off His Challengers

By Dan Rattiner

A sweaty athlete stops, drinks some Gatorade and taps it with one finger as he smiles to the TV audience. A million people go out and buy it. Another athlete, victorious after another another athletic event, talks to a TV reporter about how it happened while wearing a baseball cap that says Reebok on it. Another marketing coup.

If you took a poll, however, and asked the American public whether the athlete is endorsing the product because it is better or if it is just the money, they would undoubtedly say it is just the money. Which is how, I think, golfer Tiger Woods has gotten himself into a world of trouble.

Woods used to have an endorsement agreement with Titlist, one of the major manufacturers of golf balls. But last summer, he made a switch. For $20 million, he would in the future endorse and use Nike golf balls. Mistake.

Tiger Woods is an unparalleled golfer, who, when his concentration is good, can dominate the sport. He hits a drive fifty yards farther than anybody else. Nobody knows exactly why. He just does.

Two weeks after Woods left Titlist, however, this golf ball company came out with a new ball called a ProV1. It follows the rules for the manufacture of golf balls. But in trial tests, it goes almost fifty yards farther than any golf ball ever made. Wilson has nothing like it. Nike has nothing like it. For the first time, claims or no claims, a product has come out that is actually superior to the competition.

News of this development traveled through the golfing community like wildfire. Today, ProV1s are as hard to find as PlayStation2s. On the pro tour, however, Titlist has seen to it that the players have the inside track in getting the ball. Except Woods, of course. He is stuck with $20 million and Nike.

Until last week, the results for Tiger Woods have been nothing short of disastrous. With everybody else using ProV1s, his fifty yard superiority off the tee just about vanished. With it went his concentration. In the first four tournaments of the 2001 golf season, Woods finished fourth, eighth, thirteenth and thirteenth. Last year he had won two of these four tournaments and earned $1.6 million. This year he earned just $394,000. Is it worth it for him to keep going with the Nike contract? You do the math. It probably is. Anyway, he is legally bound to it.

A sidelight to these first four tournaments is that the TV ratings have gone up. People like Tiger, but they kind of like it when somebody gets to beat him or at least close to him to make it interesting. Furthermore, the revelation that Tiger is using an ordinary ball that does not measure up to the new ProV1 turns out to be good for both Nike and Titlist. Most of Titlist's business is in making golf balls, so this is wonderful for them. Most of Nike's business is not in golf balls but in sportswear and what is going on in the golf rivalry, not Nike's fault, is getting tremendous press for that company.

Titlist came out with a new ball called a ProV1... it goes almost fifty yards farther than any golf ball ever made.

And now, in the last two weeks, something else has happened. Tiger Woods, by a stroke or two, has started winning again — not because he is able to outhit his competition like he used to — but because he has gotten his concentration back and can outplay them around the green, where one golf ball or another does not make very much difference. He is an astonishing short game golfer when his concentration is right.

He won the Bay Hill Classic three weeks ago, and then, two weeks ago, he came from behind and won again in the Tournament Players Championship at Sawgrass in Florida.

This week is the Masters in Augusta. It's going to be quite something.

What would happen if Nike came out with a golf ball to rival that of the ProV1? Well, if Tiger Woods no longer has to play under this handicap, they'll just have to find another. Perhaps they could put lead weights in his pockets so he has to work harder to walk around the course. That's how they create a handicap in the only sport where handicaps are legal: horse racing. •

review: peter pan

By Jerry Cimisi

Watching Stages' production of Peter Pan at the Bay Street Theatre one alternated between viewing this as a timeless tale for children or a Victorian story that had more than a little Freudian undertone. We all know at least the outlines of the story: Peter Pan, the boy who won't grow up, flies into the home of Wendy, John and Michael, teaches them to soar among the stars as they proceed to Neverland where Wendy can be mother to The Lost Boys and where the three siblings will also encounter Indians, pirates and, of course, fairies, personified by the elusive will 'o the wisp, Tinker Bell.

J.M. Barrie's Peter Pan was first performed in London in 1904. It became very quickly a staple and often produced children's story, it was eventually turned into a musical. Adult fans of the forever young Peter will recall Mary Martin and Sandy Duncan as outstanding actors/singers/dancers who made the role their own.

Sixteen year-old Erin Harris made the role of Peter hers, too. Her enthusiasm and insistence on her choice to be forever a boy were vigorously convincing: she was lithe and natural as she flew through a Victorian bedroom or the skies above Neverland; and, best of all, she could sing.

Peter quickly charms Wendy, the oldest of the siblings, to come to Neverland, offering in exchange the gift of fairy-like flight and an escape from the possibility of growing up. Wendy, played by Erin Harris is certainly a capable actor and singer, too, as she goes through the curious journey of not only the trip to Neverland but her obvious attraction to Peter, while he sees in her only a mother, who will do the spring cleaning and sew on pockets. ("None of us has any pockets," he laments to Wendy.)

Wendy's brothers' John and Micheal, are played by Raphael Shapiro and Haley Willis, respectively. John is the exuberant middle child who begins the story playing at being mommy and daddy with his sister and then is gungho for adventure with Peter Pan. John, as the youngest, sees only the adventure and it is not until that end that he, along with Michael, begin to realize just what permanent residence in Neverland means. Of course, this is after some unsettling episodes with Indians and pirates – more of which in a moment.

Mr. and Mrs. Darling are the very typical Victorian parents, who start the play overseeing their children to bed before going out to a ball, and at the end of the play are mourning their children, long since gone to Neverland, and then welcome the return of Wendy, John and Michael, along with the Lost Boys, who will be adopted into the family.

The actors who play the parents fill not only the roles of Mr. and Mrs. Darling, but other very different roles. Craig Schenck is also the notorious and comical Captain Hook, and Lauren LeBer is a comical pirate herself, Smee. Mr. Schenck has made himself a staple in Stages' productions putting a very personal, comedic interpretation to all his roles. He is especially funny as Captain Hook fleeing the crocodile who had taken off his hand in a previous encounter.

Ms. LeBer, as Hook's sidekick, Smee, inadvertently says or does the wrong thing at the wrong time, as does another bumbling pirate, Starkey, played by Johanna Gristin.

The crocodile – Robbie Kohnken, in a great costume – has swallowed a clock and so Captain Hook always hears the reptile coming and can escape in time. Smee comments that eventually the clock will stop ticking and the captain will be eaten. Mr. Kohnken is also hidden in another costume, as the dog/nanny Nana who fusses over the little Darlings.

Another role of note is played by Nicole Tureski,

Delivering The Cash

From Fundraiser To Earthquake Victims, This Was The Trail Of The Money

By Helga Morpurgo

In Santiago de Maria, the entire town stayed up all night waiting for the money and supplies to arrive from Southampton's Red Barn Atelier's benefit for the children of the mission orphanage in El Salvador. Not as acute as the immediate aftershocks, tremors could still be felt weeks after the quake that had shaken El Salvador with a magnitude of 7.69 on January 13, 2001.

Atelier owner, Gines Serran-Pagan, had intended to deliver the funds personally, but he had been asked to be present at the opening of an exhibition of his new paintings at a gallery in Japan. In fact, Gines had worked so hard hanging paintings and displaying the donated items at the Atelier – not to speak of personally attending to the many details involved in organizing the benefit auction – that he had barely managed to paint enough canvases for his own exhibition in Asia.

Aided by his assistant, Gines rolled up his new canvases and shipped them to the gallery just before boarding a plane to Japan a day or so after the silent auction. Small wonder he complained about not having had any time to sleep for days prior to hosting the well-attended event!

Southampton resident Sharon Klein had suggested the fund-raiser to Gines Serran-Pagan in January when she learned of the earthquake that had occurred shortly after her departure from Santiago de Maria, where she had been visiting her friend, Maria Elizabeth Lopez after Christmas.

Maria Elizabeth Lopez, affectionately called Maribel by the natives, runs the mission orphanage in Santiago de Maria where Sharon Klein had been a guest. Having bonded with the warm, friendly people while she was there, Sharon was deeply affected by the news of the devastation suffered by the impoverished town located in the mid-western section of El Salvador.

Maribel had setup office in a tent following the powerful earthquake and had been sending out S.O.S. messages on a Dell computer attached to telephone wires to her friends all over the world. Sharon and Gines stayed in daily touch with her by telephone. They still talk several times a week.

Southampton resident Margaret Rivard accompanied Sharon Klein on her mission to bring the gathered funds to El Salvador. American Airlines had donated two complementary round trip tickets to El Salvador so that they could make a delivery of urgently needed supplies and money. American Airlines had given them an additional weight allotment so that they could purchase items that were not available in El Salvador and take them along as baggage.

Ms. Rivard and Ms. Klein went to El Salvador on March 2, 2001 and returned four days later on the night that the Hamptons was experiencing a heavy snowstorm—making their return almost as much of an adventure as their journey to the ravaged country of El Salvador.

While she was in Santiago de Maria, Ms. Klein made two videos showing the devastation of the earthquake—as well as many rolls of candid photos showing the indomitable spirit of the simple, loving people of El Salvador.

Tents were still being erected for people who had been sleeping beside rubble on the bare streets. There were photos of children, wearing nothing but underpants, huddled together, their bellies swollen with parasites due to their unhealthy living conditions. And there were photos of men erecting makeshift homes and clearing away rubble while women and children waited on line for the daily rations that were being unloaded from a pick-up truck.

Ms. Klein showed this reporter a video of the pre-dawn celebration that had taken place on the night of their arrival. The video showed gleeful men, women and children dancing and singing while rhythmically clapping hands under the roof of a large tent after having kept vigil half the night for the arrival of their guests in a pick-up truck.

The following is an interview with Sharon Klein a few days after her return:

Reporter: How much has been raised thus far?

Klein: Thus far? We just hit our goal of $10,000. People have been very generous, especially Dr. Henry Ostberg. And funds are still coming in from people who read the article in the Daily News. Buyers of some of the paintings haven't paid for the works yet. Gines just got a check for one of the paintings this morning.

Reporter: And how much did you have with you when you brought the funds to El Salvador?

Klein: We had about $2,500 worth in supplies and $6,000 in cash.

Reporter: What kinds of supplies did you bring them?

Klein: We had commercial power tools for construction, two commercial sewing machines, about two duffel bags full of medical supplies, clothing, a couple of tents and computer supplies.

Reporter: What did it look like to you when you got there?

Klein: It looked like Hiroshima. I'll show you the videos. It literally looked like a bomb had hit it. I know because I had been there two months prior and everything was still standing then. The earthquake demolished a lot of the buildings. It looked like the south Bronx in the '60's...rubble all over the place...bricks strewn everywhere...tent cities all over the village. It was shocking.

Reporter: And how was the morale of the people?

Klein: Excellent, mostly because these people have a really strong religious faith and that's what keeps them going—the belief that life will be better tomorrow. The flip side of that is that third world countries can be really, really violent when they don't have that belief. When they don't have that essential faith in God and a church or a mission to guide them they can become jealous and start looting and doing all kinds of stuff.

We pay $100 an hour to go to a shrink to relieve stress in our lives and these people basically go to church and have a prayer circle.

Reporter: Was that happening in Santiago de Maria?

Klein: There wasn't any of that where I was because Sister Elizabeth is really keeping everything together. She has her little prayer meetings three or four times a day and I think that takes the place of our going to a shrink. We pay $100 an hour to go to a shrink to relieve stress in our lives and these people basically go to church and have a prayer circle.

Reporter: It serves a purpose.

Klein: It does. It really, really serves a purpose, I mean, regardless of what we think about they're saying God rules this or whatever. It's stress relieving. Everybody was very cheerful and had a big smile on their face all the time and they were walking around with literally nothing...lost everything...don't own a single thing except the clothing on their backs. The morale was really incredible.

Reporter: Is what they practice a mixture of Catholicism and indigenous beliefs?

Klein: It's Spanish Catholicism, which is different than the kind of Catholicism I think we're accustomed to. It's kind of roots, kind of almost a fundamental type of Catholicism. It's very, very spiritualist. It's very accepting of other faiths—as though they know that the essential thing is that we're all part of God and that it doesn't matter whether you're Catholic or Jewish or anything like that. They don't have the religious infighting that we sometimes have here.

Reporter: They just have faith.

Klein: Exactly.

Reporter: Were people surprised or were they expecting you?

Klein: Not only were they expecting us, but when we pulled in at about 11 p.m. there were forty or more people waiting for us on the street and when we got out of the pick-up truck they all gave us a round of applause. Then there was a great big welcome and a prayer ceremony. I had been there before and they knew me. It was really quite moving.

Reporter: Were the children awake?

Klein: There was a whole crowd of children waiting for us in their little prayer circles. The building was structurally sound but the orphanage was closed because most of the people who had worked there had lost their homes and couldn't stay. For their own safety, most of the children had been shipped out to San Salvador or taken in by village people who had children and families of their own and who still had houses to live in. It was really a very touching kind of communal caring and the children were very cheerful.

Reporter: Maybe they won't have to be orphans anymore.

Klein: I wanted to take one of them home with me. They're so beautiful, and a lot of these kids were orphaned during the Civil War and are teenagers now. There's still a big orphan problem in El Salvador because it's a country that does not allow abortion and many people can't afford to raise their children so they give them up.

Reporter: They're that poor.

Klein: Unimaginably poor—especially outside of the village. There are children that have never left the mountain of the coffee plantation they're in and they're really malnourished. They have worms in their bellies and every kind of parasite. It's really sad. They need help even more desperately than the children living in the village.

Reporter: There are natural ways to get rid of those parasites.

Klein: It's a sad situation.

Reporter: A friend that had lived in Mexico helped me de-worm a dog by simmering several cloves of mashed up garlic in milk. It works.

Klein: They need people to go up there to do that, but the roads have been badly destroyed. They're full of ruts now and you need a four-wheel drive to get up there. People living there almost never get any medical attention because it's so hard to reach them.

Reporter: They probably have the manpower, but lack the funds for supplies.

Klein: We had $6,000 in cash and money is still coming in. We raised almost $1,000 from an article that was written about us in the Daily News.

Reporter: How?

Klein: They had my name in the article and people from all over Long Island started sending donations. The Jewish Center of the Hamptons took up a collection and some of Maribel's friends—and she knows people all over the world—sent money. I was sort of a central depository for the orphanage.

Reporter: What has been done with the money?

Klein: Maribel had located a manufacturer of prefabricated houses in San Salvador and we bought eleven little cottages to house people that had lost their homes. They cost about $1,000 a piece. The cottages were delivered and Maribel got a team to put them up on a piece of land that she had in the village. The money we brought them provided homes for eleven families.

Reporter: Eleven homes?

Klein: Yes, and they need every bit of help they can get. Maribel is getting enormous donations from people all over the world. She got two

The will of the late Warner LeRoy of Amagansett, New York City restauranteur extraordinaire, who died at 65 last month, leaves the bulk of his $48 million estate equally to his four daughters. He does, however, leave the management to his two great restaurants, Tavern on the Green and The Russian Tea Room, to his 22 year old daughter Jennifer with the caveat "this should not be construed as any preference for Jennifer over my other children, all of whom I love equally." Warner believed she understood his showmanship and by the sweat of her brow, running these establishments for him, demonstrated that they would best be left for her to run. Warner LeRoy's ex-wife Kay came away with $20 million, ordered paid to her in a divorce settlement last year.

The Sheltered Islander By Sally Flynn

OBSERVATIONS OF AN ISLANDER # 149 MUSTANG SALLY

It's Here!!! Spring!!! There are teensey weensey buds on the tree and the birds are starting to chirp the minute there is the smallest trace of light. I love birds. I work at place where the boss has a bird feeder right outside her window, and the birds who hang around her office deck have a heated birdbath. Now that's what I call for the birds.

I think there's as many birdbaths as boats in peoples' yards on Shelter Island. But a heated birdbath is quite a treat as you can imagine. We get lots of birds. I overhear alot of birdbrain conversations there.

Cardinal: "You know I've lived here all my life. It's just not right that I have to live in the woods every summer so you robins can have the birdbath."

Robin: "Look Mac, we've been coming here every summer and supporting this economy for years. Do you think you locals alone could attract enough tourists to keep you in bird seed all winter? I don't think so, fathead. We've got the voices, we are the main event here. The owners can get a good price for these places in the summer and why shouldn't they?"

BlueJay: "Maybe I can help, I'm an agent with Birds of a Feather Realty. Look cardinal, I can put you in a nice summer rental for 60 worms a month."

"Cardinal: "sixty worms a month for places that rent for twenty worms a month off season! Give me a beak..."

Blue-Jay: "Look Red, face it. You ain't gonna find a year round 20 worm a month place anymore."

Robin: "Yea, that's right, so worm up or shut up you vermillion varmit!"

Blue-Jay: "Ya wanna back off there Rob, I'm trying to close a deal here."

Cardinal: "Look I can't pull out 60 worms a month, no way."

Blue-Jay: "Geez, well tough deal kid."

Cardinal: "I'll have to fly off Island."

Blue-Jay: "Well, it's just a few months. This nice heated birdbath will be waiting for you in September."

Cardinal: "I won't be back. I need a 15-25 worm a month birdbath year round. I remember when you could always get a nice year round birdbath here."

BlueJay: "Times change kid, times change. A new crowd is moving in and they got a lot of scratch. New houses with birdbaths going up all over this Island. Heated birdbaths.. they'll be standard in two seasons. The whole Island is upgrading itself, ever think of that?"

The Island is upgrading. I still can't get over New York Ave being repaved and now a pleasure to drive. I kinda miss the potholes though, especially when they were full of rainwater and you had to test your memory and ask yourself, "How deep is that one? Can I drive through it or not?" Memorizing those potholes patterns was like a rite of passage for an Islander.

Whenever I miss the potholes too much, I can always go down Tuthill Drive on Ram Island. The potholes on New York Ave, as big as they were, were only training holes to prepare you for Tuthill Drive. You can't drive around them because there's not one tires' width between one giant pothole and the next. You turn on that road, hold your breath and commit.

Tuthill Drive, is a "Private, Residents Only" street, like HiLo Drive off West Neck Rd. What happens if you go down a private drive.... do they have special police? Is there a guard at the gate? Do you need a pass from someone who lives in the street? Maybe you have to pass a test...."Before ye may pass by me, you must answer me these questions three: What is your name? What is your quest? What is the flight speed of a coconut laden sparrow?" (If this important cultural reference escapes you, please rent and watch Monty Python's Holy Grail. Make sure you wear Depends before you start the VCR).

I love those "Residents Only" signs. Who are they keeping out? How do packages and things get delivered? Can relatives visit? Do they have little cards in their wallets identifying them as members of the HiLo Assc, or Tuthill Assc.? Are these fun clubs? Do they have those cute little lapel pins?

Sometimes, when I'm in a totally wreckless mood, I drive through those "Residents Only" streets, always pushing the outside of the envelope, that's me. I hit my cruising speed of 25 mph, bugs bouncing off my windshield as I terrorize the "Private Drives" of Shelter Island. Just call me Mustang Sally. • containers of supplies that are worth about $40,000, so they have clothing, medication and food right now. Every day she dispenses food at noon from the back of a pick-up truck. They're all there waiting on line. Her home has turned into a warehouse for food and medical supplies.

Reporter: Where does their food come from?

Klein: It's being delivered from bigger cities like San Miguel, which is approximately an hour and a half away. That's normally where their food comes from, but they need money to buy it. The most pressing issue continues to be shelter because people are still living in tents and the rainy season is about to begin. That makes it a very dangerous situation because electric wires have been strung into these tents and when the rains start it's going to be a serious fire hazard.

Reporter: So what they need most right now are more pre-fabricated cottages.

Klein: As I was leaving, a team from another mission in Virginia was arriving in order to build a shelter. They're basically a construction crew. They go all over the world building shelters for people in earthquake situations. They were coming in to build a community shelter that would have a laundry, a kitchen facility, showers, and little cubicles that people could sleep in.

Reporter: So people are coming to help from all over.

Klein: The very first assistance came from the Japanese.

Reporter: They've had a few earthquakes of their own, so they must identify. Will you be going back for another visit soon?

Klein: Actually, Maribel will be coming here in May to attend a symposium at the Synergos Institute. It's going to be a global corporate conference that addresses bridging the poverty gap. We're preparing a report and hopefully, we'll be able to give a presentation on what I feel is the lack of the ability of corporations to act in an emergency quickly. This is the gap that we discovered is missing. Maribel was calling all of these corporations for donations and they had to go through so many committees to get some kind of approval so that in the end nothing happened. The employees wanted to make something happen but their hands were tied because of corporate policies. I came up with an idea of how corporations could get little corporate bank accounts together for disaster relief when a situation arises. I want to present my idea at the conference.

Reporter: As a mortgage broker you must know about finances.

Klein: Yes – and about creative ideas for raising money. Hopefully we'll get to speak about it at this conference.

This reporter received a telephone call from John German in Manhattan, who dispenses refurbished computers donated by corporations that would otherwise be discarding them when buying new ones. Mr. German expressed his willingness to dispense computers to under-developed countries, Indian reservations and individuals. The town of Santiago de Maria may soon be receiving as many as 10,000 refurbished computers.

Donations are still being accepted for the earthquake victims of Santiago de Maria. Tax deductible checks may be made out to: Mercy Mission Children of El Salvador Fund, c/o: Sharon Klein, 30 Hartwell Lane, Southampton, NY 11968. • who, as Tiger Lily, the head of the tribe of well choreographed Indians – all girls – is another young lady becoming attracted to Peter.

Before going to see Peter Pan, I wondered why this role is always played by a woman, whether young or older. Perhaps something ineffable in the manner, dance and acrobatics of the roles calls for the feminine, but it would be interesting to see, say a twelve year old boy in the part.

Though a "female" ageless boy who attracts Wendy and Tiger Lily may be an element in what many have called the Freudian aspects of the play, the strands of the author's psyche (which must have mirrored his time as much as himself) run more deeply. There is the thread of a need for mother. The Lost Boys need a mother. Victorian England, with its nannies (mirroring, perhaps, today) was fertile ground for a child to cry out for a real parent. The fact that the nanny to the Darling children is a dog says something both sarcastic and surreal. A dog is more attentive than one's biological parents.

Wendy wants to give Peter her affectionate attentions, but Peter wants her to sew buttons; and, when he returns the children, along with the Lost Boys back to the "real" world, he says he will come back for Wendy once a year so she can do spring cleaning. A woman's work is never done.

Though the strangest part of the story is at the very end. Wendy is grown, with a child of her own. Peter appears. Wendy can no longer visit him in Neverland: she had grown up. But she has a daughter, Jane, and she responds to Peter and goes off with him – to be, of course, his mother. Strange, indeed. In the original Peter Pan story, Wendy's daughter Jane grows up, has a daughter of her own, and Peter comes for her. Now you could say that Peter represents the youthfulness that we all sadly shed, but alongside that theme one has to place some dysfunctional connection between Peter Pan (so named after the god?) and motherhood.

J.M. Barrie's own life has some not unsurprising facts that one could safely surmise went into the weave of the play's psyche. Wendy was Barrie's nickname as a child. He was short, five feet in height. It is also said that the portrayal of Wendy owes much to Barrie's own mother. Barrie's favorite brother died in a skating accident, and Barrie would dress up in his deceased brother's clothes. All these facets seemed to have surface (or come not quite to the surface) in Peter Pan.

But every creator uses his dark side to create something bright, and certainly there is something that continues to speak to us in the story and creation of Peter Pan. We more than suspect that the taking up of our duties in the adult world kills a very vital part of us. One symbol of that in the play is the fairy Tinker Bell, who is represented by an elusive light. At one point Peter says that whenever a child says he does not believe in fairies, a fairy dies. When Tinker Bell sups at some poison – placed by Hook – to keep Peter Pan from drinking it, and the fairy's light wanes, Peter begs the audience to say it believes in fairies; and of course the children in the crowd respond with apparent pointed belief.

For this production, Stages's 36th since it began putting on plays for children by children in 1994, we not only have J.M. Barrie and a group of hardworking young actors to thank, but Stages hardworking director and co-founder, Helene Leonard. Ms. Leonard dedicated this production of Peter Pan to her father, Jerry Leonard, who had a longtime children's theatre group in Cleveland. Gene Stilwell, husband of Helene, President and co-founder of Stages, said in his onstage introduction to the play, that Mr. Leonard considered Peter Pan his troupe's signature piece.

As stressed in previous reviews, Stages is continually amazed how smoothly these productions flow, especially the involved musical numbers. Stages mounts several productions a year, at Bay Street, Guild Hall and LTV. Actors 8-18 are invited to join Stages "Summer Stock 2001" program, for two four week sessions, in July, the other in August, each session culminating in a full production for the public. • sand directly in front of the snout of the seal. A wall. A statement. The seal growled. Then it turned away.

As it turned, Shawn picked up the plywood and followed, periodically sticking it into the sand on one side or the other or the back to kind of herd the seal into the surf. It went willingly, though snarlingly and angrily. However, when it got to the first rush of water coming past it, it turned and would go no further. It wanted nothing to do with the water. Shawn urged with the plywood again and again. The seal growled and snapped. It was making a stand right by the water's edge. Then, in spite of the plywood, it started to wriggle back up the beach again.

"He won't go in," Shawn said.

Out came the cell phone again and there was more conversation. Now a new decision was made.

"I'll need the heavy work gloves, and the towel," Shawn said to the woman. He turned to the rest of us. "It is going to look that either I am hurting him or he is hurting me but neither will be happening so don't worry about it."

"What are you going to do?"

"I'm going to wrap the towel over his head so he can't see. Then I'm going to pick him up and carry him to the car."

Nobody said a word.

Shawn gave the woman the plywood and the cell phone. Then with the work gloves on, and holding the towel, he got around to the back of the animal, kneeled down and put the towel over its head. The seal struggled a bit. Then it stopped. Then Shawn got his arms under it, held it like a baby, then struggled with it to his feet. He started to walk along down the beach path, the rest of us single file behind again. And for the first half of the walk the seal lay still in his arms. Then it struggled and growled again and Shawn had to put it down and get a better grip, then pick it up again.

What a brave guy, I thought.

The real surprise, though, is what happened when we got to the Jeep. Shawn, still holding the seal, instructed Kim to open the back. She did. Inside were two other seals, one of them a harp seal in a cage, the other another grey seal lying alongside the cage.

"Can you make him fit?" Kim asked.

"Oh yes. Just go around the side and put the plywood on top of the cage."

Kim did.

Shawn lay the seal down like a sack of groceries behind the cage and closed the hatch. Then he breathed a sigh.

"That's quite a crowd you've got there," I said. "All from today?"

"All from today."

"Any of the others sick?"

"Both of them."

"How many seals you have up in Riverhead?"

"Right now, about forty."

Shawn handed out his business card. Beside the long name that matched their red jackets, it read NYS MARINE MAMMAL AND SEA TURTLE STRANDING PROGRAM. And there was a phone number. And an address, which was at the Riverhead Aquarium on East Main Street.

We said our goodbyes, and I drove the couple back to their car at Highway Behind the Pond. Then I drove through town. It was a busy day, people everywhere, the men on their cell phones, the women parading alongside them in their Ralph Lauren outfits. Ford Explorers were jockeying with Chevy Yukons for parking spaces. "Would you just let me back up?" someone shouted.

You wouldn't have imagined that the stock market had just fallen further in one month than it had since 1974.

Up on Three Mile Harbor Road, there was a big tie up of cars in both directions. Cars were coming up to it fast, then screeching to a halt. When I got to the front of the jam I saw four city people, all dressed in their country clothes, holding the collar of a perfectly healthy black lab. They had him down on the white line in the middle of the road. One of the women was on a cell phone. Another was directing traffic.

"Lost dog, we've got a lost dog here!" she shouted, holding up her cell phone to the oncoming traffic. "Stop the cars! Stop the cars!"

As I reached the front of the line, I heard the loud voice of a woman on the porch of a small house by the side of the road. "Buster!" she shouted. "Buster! Get outta there!"

Buster's ears perked up. Then he lifted himself, broke away from the woman holding his collar and trotted off the road in the direction of home.

I imagined the Jeep Cherokee crashing into the back of all this, sending yelping seals off into the cell phones, poodles, those little round wire rim sunglasses, Donna Karan coats and Rotweilers.

And I imagined Buster sitting there off on the side of the road watching all this and scratching himself. •

SPIRIT OF DISCOVERY II

No it's not a cruise ship, it is the name of an event to raise money for the Leukemia and Lymphoma Society, fighting blood-related cancers. Last week's event marked the second year for the ball, although the Society's program goes back over 50 years. The honorees this year included Alberto Vilar, a highly successful investment advisor as humanitarian of the Year, Dennis Swanson Prez/GM of NBC4 and co-chair of the NBC Olympics, Andre Midani of Warner Music Latin America, and the ever striking Cindy Crawford. Grammy Winner Olga Tanon electrified the crowd with her performance.

EAST MEETS FAR EAST

Although it is the first week of Spring, The American Museum of Natural History had its annual Winter Dance sponsored by Glamour magazine. Many of New York's "A" list juniors were there to celebrate the wonders of the Far East. The museum has an extensive collection of Asian artifacts on display. Having been to Mainland China, Thailand and Cambodia over the last two years, I cannot wait to go back to the museum to relive some memories.

HARRY BELAFONTE'S WORLD

Music stylist, human rights activist and UNICEF Goodwill Ambassador Harry Belafonte gave a rare performance to benefit the Center for Cuban Studies at Lincoln Center's Avery Fisher Hall. The show, political by association, attempted to win friends for the cause of normalization of relations with Cuba through the music of that island. Harry's first performance in New York in five years was terrific. ...Focus on the North Fork

Laurel Links Breaks Ground

When Laurel Links Ltd., the new owners of the proposed site for the development of luxury houses and a championship-quality golf course finally closed on the purchase of the 226 acre property situated on the Main Road (Route 25) and Peconic Bay Boulevard in the hamlet of Laurel on the North Fork, it marked the end of three protracted years of negotiations. With a project such as this, involving the turning of formerly agricultural land to new uses, there were many environmental and planning questions which had to be addressed.

David Saland, President of Laurel Links Ltd., "From the very beginning we were determined to work closely with the Town authorities and environmental bodies to ensure that everything we did met their requirements. The North East Environmental Council has given the project their blessing and in the course of our deliberations, we offered to the Town that we would give up the development rights to the golf course part of the property in perpetuity so that that area is safeguarded forever. We also ensured that the design of the golf course did not encroach onto a significant wetlands area within the total area," he explained. After the closing, without any further delay, the earth moving and digging equipment moved on site and work commenced on turning this previous potato farm into the North Fork's newest Country Club.

The actual development work is being carried out by Laurel Links Country Club and David Saland is the Director responsible to the Board of Directors for the project and he went on to talk about this aspect, "We have engaged Kelly Blake Moran to design the course and we are delighted to have been able to obtain his services. He has built up a considerable reputation on projects such as Hideout Golf Club, a private course in Naples Florida, Hawke Pointe Golf Club in Warren County New York and the new back nine holes at Calverton, Long Island and he worked on many major projects when he was a partner with von Hagge Design Associates for eleven years."

Talking to Kelly Moran, you immediately realize that he is not a golf architect who sets out to dramatically alter the existing terrain to construct a new course. His approach is more akin to make up than major plastic surgery as he looks at the inherent characteristics of the chosen location and then accentuates them, rather than making massive alterations to the topography.

Their forward plan calls for the installation of irrigation and drainage systems followed by the completion of the grading and structure of fairways and greens by the end of August. This will then allow for late summer, early autumn seeding to allow for consolidation of root structures over the winter. The course is planned for opening by the fall of 2002 at which time the luxury homes will also have been completed.

David Saland explained about the golf course membership and the homesites. "The development allows for 29 homes each on a 3/4 acre site. The purchasers of the sites have the ability to have their homes built by their builder of choice providing the designs are in accord with our covenants. Twenty-two lots have already been sold and we have also sold about half of the planned 325 memberships of the golf course."

Apart from the championship golf course there will also be a 14,000 sq.ft. clubhouse built in the New England style with brick fireplaces and every amenity. The complex will also have an Olympic sized swimming pool and two tennis courts.

This project plans to be an exciting addition to the new golf complexes on Long Island and in a later issue we will bring you a detailed exclusive interview with Kelly Blake Moran as he shares his thoughts on how a golf course designer goes about his business and we will also follow the progress on the actual construction of the course over the spring and summer ahead, culminating eventually with the actual opening of the course.

Beauty And The Beasts

Most of us drive through and around Riverhead and see a town working hard to bring life back to its downtown while, on its outskirts, an ever-growing mega outlet mall keeps right on growing. We never see that, just two or three miles north of Main Street, there is pristine farm land housing, almost incongruously, one of the country's top equestrian training grounds as well as one of the country's few remaining herds of an animal which once roamed in its multitudes across this country: the buffalo.

To find out more about this I went to North Quarter Farm to meet local businessman Ed Tuccio and his wife, Dee Muma. Ed and Dee first met when she came to the area to purchase some land and Ed was the realtor handling the sale and they now have been married for twenty-two years.

Dee had been a horse riding enthusiast for a long while and enjoyed jumping until a freak gardening accident prevented her from continuing and eventually she moved on to the graceful but equally demanding art of dressage. Now, dressage involves horse and rider seemingly moving as one through a set of complicated exercises which takes a horse through all of its natural gaits. Throughout the exercise the rider must not make any overt signals of controlling the horse and even though the competition lasts just seven minutes, the rider will finish completely drained .

Dee told me, "I was very fortunate to become a pupil of one of the best dressage teachers and his first words to me were that I had a lot of talent and a lot of ignorance and I should leave my ego at the door as I came in! Finding the right horses for development into competition dressage horses takes a lot of time and money and, over the years, I was fortunate in being able to go abroad for competitions to bring me up to the top level in the sport."

In 1992 Dee was selected to represent the United States in the dressage competition in the Barcelona Olympics. "We took the horses over early in the summer to acclimate them to the heat and Barcelona in '92 turned out to be very hot. It was incredible to be there representing my country and the feeling when we won the Team Bronze medal was indescribable. I had always been determined not to go to pieces if I ever was fortunate enough to win a medal there but when it came to the medal ceremony, I did."

Working to keep in shape for the top competitions is extremely demanding of both time and money, and Dee decided that it was time to spend more time, instead, training horses and riders and more time with Ed. Dee has a very well equipped training facility on their 300-acre farm with an indoor 15,000 square foot arena. "Today, I train most of the time and ride about five or six horses a day compared to the nine or ten when I was in full training. Now we also take the horses and the pupils down to Florida during the winter where we have about 150 acres, also with full facilities for training."

As a complete contrast to the graceful equestrianism, across the road on another part of the vast farm, graze a herd of some fifty bison (or buffalo). Ed is the President of the National Buffalo Foundation which numbers among its members Ted Turner, who has over 25,000 head of bison on his lands. Ed explained to me how he became involved with bison. "We were on a ski trip to Aspen when I saw a couple of bison and there was such a majesty about them that I decided there and then that this was something I wanted to become involved in. Seventeen years ago, I bought my first two."

We loaded into Ed's truck and, after passing through a series of protective gates, we came literally face to face with the herd. Even from a distance there is no mistaking their incredible size but when you come within a couple of feet of them you feel very grateful that, in general, they don't charge and that the truck could outrun them (you hope). The visit was even more memorable because, at one end of the field, there was a lone animal. Ed told us with pride that she had had a baby that day and we cautiously drove towards it and were rewarded with a close up of a wobbly-legged baby bison taking its first steps. It was interesting to see how the rest of the herd quickly came over where we were and you could sense the protective nature of their presence.

Ed breeds the bison and sells them to other enthusiasts and, at present, the buffalo meat served in his atmospheric new restaurant, Tweed's, in downtown Riverhead, actually comes in from Canada.

Touring this very diverse and beautiful property makes you give thanks that there are people around like Ed and Dee who, apart from being very successful business people, are prepared to keep such a large acreage of potentially valuable development land as home to bison, horses and the animals and birds who also live there.

Shop 'til You Drop...With Maria Tennariello

The rain in Spain...you know the rest. Time for a new umbrella. Let's do some shopping.

Starting out in Sag Harbor to see what all the fuss is about at Around Again Home Style on the Long Wharf. I was really amazed at the large inventory here, including country, traditional and vintage merchandise. If you are looking for an old Victrola in perfect looking order, look no further, it's here. How about a 1950s solid maple dining set or a great whitewash farm table? And if you love wicker like I do, there is a wicker sale going on and lots of spring clothing arriving daily. Give them a call at 725-8658.

At Touche Couture on Main Street in Southampton their doors are open for spring. Everything is newly decorated and stocked with fresh, stylish merchandise from Paris and Italy. To kick off the 2001 season they are having a sale on the capris in two differrent styles, buy one, get one free...For special summer events Touche will be premiering a collection of custom-made couture gowns and evening gowns. Think prom!

At Double Rainbow at the light in Water Mill, you will find a litle bit of heaven for children of all ages. On Saturday, April 14, from 1 to 2:30, bring the kids to see the Easter Bunny live and receive a free gift for every child. There is quite a selection of unique toys, chocolate Easter bunnies, Easter baskets, candy, plush Easter animals, Joseph Schmidt Chocolates and greeting cards along with the largest selections of Godiva in the Hamptons.

Are you looking for Butler's Art –Antiques? Their new location is on Main Street in Amagansett right before the Amagansett Farmer's Market. They are continuing to carry 19th and early 20th century fine and folk art with a unique and complementary selection of antiques and accessories.

Also in Amagansett at the Square, at Starfish spring has arrived and the opening season starts on Saturday, April 7. Lorraine has added "Back Room Bargains," a fun filled area of the shop, jammed with off price designer clothing and accessories. There are washable silk shorts and tops, $15, designer jeans $25, funky designer bags, $12.95, crushable hats in beautiful pastels $19.95, floral dresses $25, and much much more. All you fashion conscious, bargain hunters are going to love his shop. Call for store hours at 267-3455.

Well, time to get home to meet some friends at World Pie in Bridgehampton for some small talk and a glass of wine. Then home to plan my next shopping trip.

Until next week. Ciao and Happy Holiday Shopping!

Q. I am looking for an old iron bed and some great looking collectables, stuff like my grandma used to have. Do you know of any? K.R. Holbrook

A. I found a great shop called Peddler's Wagon, 150' Long Island Avenue in Holtsville. If you're looking for something special and stuff like grandma used to have, this is the place, wait 'til you see what they have here. Fun stuff like furniture, bureaus, beds, dining sets, china closets, rockers, end tables, lamps, bric a brack, silverware and even jewelry from the 40s and 50s. This shop gets new merchandise every day. Give a call at 631-654-4881.

elaine k.g. benson, her daughter's column

There are days when it seems everyone you talk to is having trouble. Is it something in the air?

I woke up this morning to a call from a friend. Someone very close is severely depressed. The depression seemed contagious. It is hard to hear that someone you love is in pain. During my first cup of coffee another friend came by the house. He told me a story about his brother's death. Next someone came by for a check. He is going through some legal hassles regarding an Ex. It doesn't sound easy. I owed him money. It will go to lawyer's fees. Finally I checked my E-mail. There was a note from a friend who apologized for being out of touch. He recently changed lawyers. He's trying to deal with his mother's estate. His lawyer wasn't working out. He found a new lawyer. Now the first lawyer is suing him. What's happening?

A new-age friend of mine always has an astrological explanation. When things seem difficult she invariably states something like, "Mercury must be in retrograde, makes for trouble with communication." What does that mean? Is the planet going backward? Is there trouble with communication everywhere? I like to think if I call a few more people someone will tell me that they're having a great time. I want to hear of new love, a contract for a new book, a screenplay that was just accepted, a new painting that's a breakthrough, anything that's positive.

On a happier note, it seems half the people I talk to are having birthdays this week. Yesterday, I was at Local Color in East Hampton. Lori, who works there, is having a birthday. My friend Kevin's birthday was on the second. My friend Nancy called last night. It was her birthday the day before yesterday. My friend Sean, his mother-in-law Loreen, my first boyfriend from kindergarten, a few other friends and I are all celebrating birthdays this week. I counted back nine months to try to figure it out. Couples must like the heat of summer. There are so many babies born in April.

My friend, Gines, is throwing me a party. This is not a major birthday. I'm usually not here for my birthday and I find it a little embarrassing. Still it's been a long cold winter and everyone seems up for a party. Who am I to deny my friends a reason to celebrate? Gines is a gracious host. He has an open door policy and provides a meeting place and inspiration to artists. He appreciates any form of creative expression. I've been at his house for a music recital for young musicians. He has hosted fundraisers and art exhibitions. His house is a combination art gallery, petting zoo, home, and meeting place for artists. It has the feeling of an ongoing artist's salon. I often come home from his house and go directly to my studio.

There is a fertile, creative air around Gines. For years people have told me we need a place for artists to meet and exchange ideas. Gines has done a great job of providing people with a place. Although Gines is a new friend, he makes me feel he has been a part of my life for a long time. His son Paco, who's six, has also become a good friend.

It's time to leave the cold winter behind and think about springtime and budding branches. Friends found a baby owl in their yard this week. It's a time of birth and rebirth. The seasons turn and moods change. The planet keeps turning. It doesn't go backwards.

Paint a painting, write a poem, do your spring-cleaning. Plant some flowers. Watch them grow. Happy birthday, Aries! Throw a party. We'll all come!

–Kimberly Goff

ART COMMENTARY

With Marion Wolberg Weiss

DANIEL JONES AT SAG HARBOR PICTURE GALLERY

Taking an idea from the likes of Edward Weston and Ansel Adams, two photographers who also evoke emotion through their landscape, North Fork resident Daniel Jones says his work reflects "What I see and feel."

The current selection at the Sag Harbor Picture Gallery certainly mirrors Mr. Jones' proclaimed sentiment. While many of his photographs are well-known to East Enders, including "Beach Fences" (a kind of visual signifier for the area), other pieces seem fresh and not the least bit dated.

There's also a formal, visual pattern at work which becomes more apparent in this exhibit than ever before — one that conveys a philosophy that goes beyond Mr. Jones' photographing what "he sees and feels." Thus, Mr. Jones sees and feels in consistent, recurring ways: ways that form a world view regarding natural elements and our relationship with them.

"Fogged In..."

Initially, Mr. Jones establishes a sense of isolation in some pictures ("Wheat Fieldhouse and Tree") with a sole barn and tree overwhelmed by a surrounding field. There's a similar import in "Seven Pilings," shimmering sticks surrounded by water with no place to go. Clouds, not water or fields, serve the same purpose for a lonely old farm house in "Approaching Storm." Long shots reinforce this loneliness.

Conversely, tighter shots give a feeling of comfort and protection from the exterior elements that can exact their toll, like storms, water, and the earth. Consider, for example, "Slot Canyon #3," a view from inside a cave which looks out to fathom the "beyond." The cave's opening is circular, suggesting, like another photograph, "Ripples," that life turns back upon itself.

The circular pattern in the latter picture lies flat on the water, its ripples extending beyond the horizon; instead, the cave's opening creates depth, yet still extends beyond the horizon as well.

"Rusting Place" evokes a similar emotion of containment and protection from the inside out: while the baskets on the floor of an old barn are not circular in shape, the door's opening produces the same distancing experience.

It's curious to note that Mr. Jones' photographs do not entirely feature the local region. No matter. They do, in fact, reflect most importantly what he "sees and feels."

The show will be on view until April 15.

Honoring the Artist: Lois Gold

Like a lot of us, painter Lois Gold is in the process of putting her life together— one step at a time. It's an endeavor that never seems to stop, an ongoing activity which lasts a lifetime. Most of us get tired along the way.

Not Ms. Gold. We have the feeling that once she decides to pursue a particular path, she goes at it with gusto. (Her previous work featuring beach paths drove home the point.) Recently, she has set a different course, new directions in professional and personal pursuits that enable Ms. Gold to carve a new life for herself.

While this week's cover, "Summer Light," is characteristically moody and mysterious, with its low horizon and a cloud crossing the picture plane, Ms. Gold's art nowadays reflects a change. "I have changed my medium," she explains. " I now do oil pastel on board; it's still landscape, but the horizons are higher. I concentrate more on land than sky. The work is a little more abstract, the palette more contained; I'm using less colors. I feel more grounded with these new works."

There are other changes as well. For one, Ms. Gold is making smaller paintings than she had previously ("I don't have to frame them with glass now," she notes). She is also creating both diptychs and triptychs, two or three panel pieces which read as one image.

Very much present in many new works is the moon, a symbol which is perhaps taking the place of her beach paths. Ms. Gold admits that the moon may have special meaning: "The moon has phases; I am going into a new phase myself. But initially I captured the moon instinctively."

Ms. Gold is putting her life together in other ways, taking risks, welcoming change. "I'm open to new things," she says honestly. "I'm taking Italian lessons and ballroom dancing, things I always wanted to do. I pick things I have a natural talent for. I like languages. I wouldn't pick carpentry," she laughs.

Ms. Gold comes by her talent naturally. She has a Masters degree in French from Columbia University and thus the interest in Italian. Her family is filled with artists, too: her grandfather was a doctor who drew well, her aunt was a potter. Moreover, Ms. Gold's mother collected art and did flower arranging, an activity that she says, "I love to do. I arrange all kinds of things like my coffee table and shelves."

But it's Ms. Gold's sister, Loren, with whom she has the most professional connection. "My sister and I write together, journals about our shared childhood," she explains. "We pick one person and each writes about that person. It is interesting to see how our perceptions connect to each other. They are the same perceptions, although I do automatic writing. My sister is a professional writer."

Regardless of Ms. Gold's various activities, you can bet she will continue with her art, experimenting, welcoming change, "putting her life together."

–Marion Wolberg Weiss

Ms. Gold will be having a one-person show at East Hampton's Lizan Tops Gallery from June 30 - July 24.

WORLD WAR II SOUVENIRS

As far as I can tell, Hitler lost the war, but won a place in the hearts of an inordinately large American audience by way of a Media Blitz of books and television documentaries that brought prices to a soaring level for Nazi memorabilia and such and, then there's the even higher price to be paid for the care and feeding of the dangerous followers of Hitler's evil principals. Concurrently, Steven Spielberg's Saving Private Ryan, Tom Brokaw's books, etc., have served to remind the world of the men and women who won the war. It is of interest to me that these fine endeavors rise predominantly with the heated air of nostalgia. This suits America just fine. Tom Hanks is in England doing his own *Ryane*sque film series for television and the blunderbuss of movie producers, Jerry Bruckheimer, is doing Pearl Harbor.

Enemy At The Gates

GONE WITH THE WINDS OF WAR

Now, the Europeans have raised their rifles and taken aim at a world-wide market for World War II. French director, Jean-Jacques Annaud and co-writer (with him) Alain Godard, have recreated the Siege of Stalingrad, no doubt inspired by the success of Pvt. Ryan and the Hollywood perennial Gone With The Wind. I admit to perhaps being a bit unfair to their really quite impressive film which opened the recent Berlin Film Festival. With a big war chest, anted-up by British, German, French and Irish investment, the movie is produced with massive panoramic largess of such grand enormity... it makes Pvt. Ryan look as if it were shot on the cut-rate, back lot of Columbia Pictures. I have always felt disappointment that Mr. Spielberg's combat film followed the pattern laid down by dozens of the 40s and 50s familiar "platoon" war movies... except, of course, for his signature, sentimental book-ending... an opening reprised at the end.

A DIFFERENT ATTACK

Mr. Annaud has, wonderfully, given us a facsimile of the enormity of the Stalingrad defense and the attacking Germans, in a battle that lasted more than six months and is said to have had about two million casualties. Yes, there is some similarity to Pvt. Ryan's D-Day landing's graphic bloodletting. However, Annaud's film opens the carnage wider and included extra horrors like the Russians cold-bloodedly killing their own troops if thought to be retreating. And, too, his scenes are done in somber, dark artistic tonalities... red and

MAYOR KOCH Goes To THE MOVIES

Memento (+)

This is one of the most unusual films I have ever seen. It consists of a series of scenes moving forward and backward in time, and you are never sure which, but they all involve the life of Leonard (Guy Pearce) during a short period of time, probably just a few days.

We learn that while Leonard was sleeping either one or two men entered his home and raped and murdered his wife. During the attack, he was beaten and now suffers from permanent short term memory loss.

That loss means that Leonard can't remember anything that happened after the incident, but believes that he remembers everything up to his being rendered unconscious. He has developed a system of keeping in touch with reality by taking instant polariod pictures of people with whom he interacts, writing messages to himself, and even tattooing the most important bits of information on his body.

Leonard interacts with Teddy (Joe Palantonio), who professes to be his friend, but who Leonard believes killed his wife. Leonard also interacts with Natalie (Carrie-Ann Moss). She is a barmaid who befriends Leonard so that he will murder her lover, a drug dealer who beats her up regularly.

Even though you never know who is telling the truth to him or whether what he remembers about his wife's murder is accurate, it is fascinating to watch. Somehow, it reminded me of the story of "The Lady and the Tiger," and not knowing what is behind the unopened door. The Angelica has devoted two theaters to the movie and the lines are heavy.

smoking with the explosive force of a gun muzzle. The artistic quality is the amazing feat of cinematographer Robert Fraisse, who manages to vary hues and shadings to picture the changing, separate dramas so descriptively. He and the director really did not need the heavy hand of music composer, James Horner. (As Bette Davis said of composer Max Steiner, "I can walk up the stairs quite well alone, thank you.")

CAST HITS THEIR MARK WELL

All those Francs, Deutsche marks etal, bought the best cast their money can buy. Dollars might have bought a less apt set of actors. For one thing, Annaud's performers are not yet too identified with other roles. (Some critics have dumbly compared Ed Harris, who is a German Officer in this film, to his Pollock.) Comparative new-comer, Jude Law, is patently one of the brightest stars around. He is central to Enemy At the Gates. He is the true-life marksman whose ability is put to use as a sniper. In Russia's darkest moment he is put forth as their great hope and encouragement as, daily, his score of important kills are announced... much like Joe DiMaggio's streak of hits. Another find is Joseph Fiennes as the party propagandist who, with Nikita Kruschchev (a crackerjack role for Bob Hoskins), build him into a national hero.

EUROPE PREFERS LOVE ABOVE WAR

Now here's where the whole thing starts crumbling like the Berlin Wall was to later. There is a love affair (purportedly true). Another terrific actor, Rachel Weisz, and the sharpshooter fall madly in love AND the manipulating, Fiennes ALSO is madly in love with her. This has made me as mad as hell. The script bellies-up with trashy plot fillers and crudely, mis-directed dialogue. And, then there is Ed Harris as Germany's best shot to take out the hero and turn the battle around in a High Noon finale... I'm so mad... I don't want to talk about it....

silvia lehrer's cooking column

The Passover seder is an intimate and happy family celebration. The first two nights of Passover, celebrated this year on April 7 and 8 respectively, mark the spring festival of the exodus from Egypt and the liberation of the Israelites from slavery. Participants at the seder read the story of the exodus from the Haggadah, the book that recalls the liberation with ritual food and song.

Because of the prohibition of foods that contain leaven, such as flour, yeast, baking powder and virtually any foods that expand in cooking, the foods eaten at Passover differ from those prepared year-round. Matzo and matzo meal are the basis for many Passover dishes and substitute for flour, breadcrumbs, etc. in many recipes.

The different cultures within the Jewish community generally prepare the beloved foods of their origins. Few take a more adventurous path from the traditional meal of their heritage. For many, desserts for Passover seem to pose the most challenge. Here are some dessert choices for the home cook who is willing to experiment.

PASSOVER COCONUT MERINGUE MACAROONS

These macaroons are light and tender and simple to prepare. They have no relation to the chewy, sugary commercial confection.
Yield: 14-15 macaroons

1 package (7 ounce) sweetened flaked coconut
2/3 cup sugar superfine sugar
2 large egg whites, divided
1 teaspoon vanilla
1/4 cup matzo cake meal (not matzoh meal)
Pinch salt
1/4 teaspoon lemon juice

Preheat oven to 325 degrees.

1. Lightly grease a cookie sheet and set side. Set up a double boiler with one and one-half inches of boiling water in the lower pan. Place the coconut, half the sugar and 1 egg white in the top part of the double boiler. Cook, stirring frequently for about 4-5 minutes until mixture is soft. Stir in vanilla and pinch of salt. Remove from heat. Add the cake meal and stir to mix until fully incorporated.

2. Meanwhile, using a clean whisk or electric hand mixer, beat the second egg white until foamy in a small clean stainless bowl. Add the lemon juice then gradually whisk in the remaining sugar, 1 teaspoon at a time, beating well after each addition until the meringue is smooth and nearly stiff but not dry. Fold meringue into coconut mixture until thoroughly incorporated.

3. Place a heaping tablespoon of the mixture onto the prepared cookie sheet, spaced about 1-inch apart. Bake in preheated oven for 20-22 minutes until light brown and tender. Can be prepared up to several days ahead and stored in a waxed paper-lined cookie tin.

This all-occasion light textured cake makes a perfect finale for a traditional Passover seder. Susan Purdy is a respected professional baking teacher and author.
Yield: one 10 x 4-inch tube (angel food cake pan) cake: 12 servings

3/4 cup matzo meal
1/2 cup potato flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 cup granulated sugar, divided
1/3 canola or safflower oil
1 large egg, separated, plus 5 egg whites, at room temperature
3/4 cup fresh orange juice
Grated zest of 1 large orange (2-3 tablespoons)
3 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
Grated zest of 1 lemon (2-3 tablespoons)
1 teaspoon pure orange or lemon extract

Position a rack in the center of the oven and preheat oven to 350 degrees. Do not grease the tube pan.

1. Sift together the matzo meal, potato flour, salt and 1/2 cup of the sugar into a large bowl. Stir these ingredients together. Make a well in the center and add the oil, egg yolk, orange juice and zest, lemon juice and zest, and extract, but do not blend together at this point. Set aside.

2. In a large grease-free bowl, or in the bowl of an electric mixer, whip the eggs whites until foamy. Gradually add the remaining 1/2 cup sugar, and whip until the whites are satiny and nearly stiff but not dry: do not overbeat. Shake off the beaters into the bowl, and, without washing them, return them to the mixer.

3. With the mixer at low speed, beat the dry and liquid ingredients in the first bowl until well blended. Gradually fold in the whipped whites by hand. Don't worry if there are some streaks of white remaining.

4. Turn the batter into the ungreased cake pan. Bake for about 50 minutes, or until the top of the cake is golden brown and feels springy to the touch, and cake tester comes out clean. Invert the pan so it stands upside down on its own feet, or hang the pan upside down over the neck of a bottle or large funnel. Let cool completely.

4. To remove the cake from the pan, slide the blade of a long thin knife between the cake and the sides of the pan. (If the pan has a removable bottom, remove the sides first, then slide the knife between the pan bottom and cake to release it.) To serve, cut with a serrated knife.

PASSOVER CHOCOLATE ROLL

An inspired Passover dessert from Israeli Cooking teacher, Yocheved Hirsch

1/2 cup potato starch
1/4 cup cocoa for cake plus extra for dusting
Pinch salt
4 large egg, at room temperature
3/4 cup sugar
2 tablespoons white Creme De Menthe or Grand Marnier

Filling*
1 cup raspberry preserves
2 teaspoons Kirsch or Framboise (cherry or raspberry liqueur)

Preheat oven to 425 degrees.

1. Prepare pan: Grease a 11x18 jelly roll pan with butter or vegetable oil and line with parchment paper extending the paper to 2-inches beyond the edge of the pan. Grease the paper and dust with cocoa.

2. Break eggs into mixing bowl or bowl of electric mixer and beat until frothy. Gradually beat in sugar. Continue beating until mixture is pale yellow and very thick.

3. In three additions, add dry sifted ingredients to egg mixture, folding gently after each addition. Add Creme De Menthe or Grand Marnier and stir to mix. Pour batter into prepared pan and smooth out gently, then place in preheated oven. Meanwhile dampen a clean kitchen towel and spread it on a flat surface.

4. Bake the cake for 7-8 minutes or until the top springs back when lightly touched and cake begins to come away from sides of pan. If the cake is sticking to the sides of the pan cut around it quickly with a small, sharp knife. Immediately invert on to the dampened towel, remove pan and carefully peel off the parchment paper. With the aid of the towel, roll up cake lengthwise and let sit for 10 to 15 minutes.

5. When cake is cool, unroll and spread generously with raspberry preserves mixed with the liqueur. Reroll and transfer to a rectangular board or platter. Refrigerate. When ready to serve, cut off ends, as they are likely to look dry and dust top of cake with additional cocoa powder.

Men: The New Women?

By Susan Simm

For years, "real men" were macho and rugged. Their idea of grooming was a shave and a trip to the barbershop.

Today, men are being targeted by cosmetics companies for items that used to be only for women. In a recent New York magazine article about male vanity, writer Alex Williams asks the question: "Are men the new women?"

I took an informal survey among friends and aquaintances, both male and female, about what they would consider acceptable for a man to do to enhance his looks and what they think is over the top. I found the responses from my female friends and coworkers most interesting. My husband's friend, Joe, a New York City fireman, responded with old-fashioned machismo. "I don't go for all that manicure, pedicure stuff," he said. "It seems a little swishy to me." I didn't ask him to elaborate on the definition of "swishy," but I think you get the point.

Another friend, Jimmy, who owns and captains a charter fishing boat, had a different point of view. "I have gone to the manicurist with my girlfriend to get my hands done. She loves it. I am working up to a pedicure, but what I really want to do is get the hair removed from my back. I've done some research about it and they have a new technique for hair removal that is less painful than electrolysis and is permanent. They call it laser hair removal. I would definitely do that!"

Jimmy may seem enlightened compared to Joe, but Brian is light years ahead of both of them. "I want to look twenty-five for as long as I can," Brian said. "I will do whatever: Botox, facial scrubs, even surgery. Why not? Women have been doing this stuff for years. Think about it, do you think a guy would be willing to have a bag of jell stuffed into a certain part of his body to make it look bigger?"

Brian may have touched on an important point: women have been enhancing their looks for years, while men have been a bit lax. "Why do you always see some young, hot looking woman with some fat, old fart?" asked my friend Diane. "I just think that men need to try to look good. A lot of guys seem to think that they can get away with being fat or whatever. You would never see a gorgeous man with an overweight, homely looking woman." That seemed to be the sentiment among my female surveyees. "I would love for my husband to try even a manicure," said my friend Vicki. "It's not that he thinks it's dumb, I really think that it just doesn't occur to him that I might like it." Or that he might like it?

So, is it that men are not concerned with their looks? Or do they feel funny about being concerned about their looks? According to Williams, all of the major cosmetics firms have scrubbing lotions, resurfacers and hydrating balms for men. Somebody must be buying these products and not just models and actors. "I couldn't use that stuff," said Jimmy. "I would be afraid people would think I'm gay."

Ah ha! Therein lies the rub (scrub?). That's why Williams quotes an executive from Estee Lauder who said, "We couldn't call it makeup. The M-word is taboo. Guys have a real problem with that." Straight men won't use makeup, but if you call it something else like "Philosophy's Power Shower Body Wash" or "Jules & Jane's Tonic Toner," then it's OK.

Does this also mean that gay men are OK with the word makeup? Nope.My friend Dennis and his boyfriend both use the scrubbing lotion made by Clinique, but don't call it makeup. "Most gay men don't wear makeup. My boyfriend and I don't go around in high heels and miniskirts, either. Taking care of yourself isn't a gay thing; it's a good thing. Most people feel more confident about themselves when they look good. What's wrong with that?" asked Dennis.

If a guy is willing to spend money on a health club membership, a career coach and some therapy, then why can't he go to the day spa for some R&R? "I think guys should try it," said Diane. "They might like being taken care of for a day." Ellen had a different point of view. "I think a lot of women would be resentful if men started going to day spas. That has been a kind of closed place for men. I don't think women would like the intrusion."

The end result of my survey was inconclusive, but men seem to be more open to discussing these ideas than I expected. I think many men feel as Brian does; they want to hold onto youthfulness as long as possible. Just as women feel that the current (eternal?) ideal, a stick-thin figure with large breasts, is awfully hard to attain and maintain after the age of eighteen, men are beginning to be held to the same standards and are starting to feel the pressure. I'm thinking Brad Pitt, as an ideal, is a good start for inspiration. Now if my husband would just.....

Seeing Through The Hype: The Realities Of LASIK

When Michael May, an analyst from Short Hills, NJ decided to undergo laser eye surgery, he expected to wake up the following day with near perfect vision. Similarly, Gregg Doane, a retiree who splits his time between Daytona, Fla. and New York City, thought his day of wearing glasses would be over following LASIK. Both had ample reasons to think things would go flawlessly – LASIK is considered a routine surgery and was performed over one million times in 2000. However May and Doane both experienced complications, placing them with the growing number of patients who experience post-LASIK complications.

While LASIK is a safe procedure with most patients experiencing near perfect vision following the surgery, there are cases where patients experience varying degrees of complications. Problems arise when the doctor performing the procedure is not adequately trained to deal with complications, and the problems are not corrected appropriately. Both Michael May and Gregg Doane were referred to Dr. Mark G. Speaker, a leading corneal and laser vision corrective surgeon who is increasingly called on to correct LASIK complications. "LASIK requires more technical skill training than other laser procedures, there are many split-second decisions that need to be made during the surgery," said Dr. Dr. Speaker, director of TLC, the Laser Center in Manhattan. "The risks associated with LASIK greatly increase in inexperienced hands."

Michael May knew the day after the surgery that something was wrong with the vision in his right eye. He described the sensation, "like trying to see through crinkled saran wrap." May's cornea had become wrinkled and his surgeon tried to rectify the condition by manually flattening the cornea, but the surgery was not successful and May continued to have problems.

At the doctor's suggestion, May went to see Dr. Speaker in New York City. Dr. Speaker realized he would need to act quickly so that the wrinkles in May's cornea would not become permanent. In a delicate operation that involved re-lifting the corneal flap, pulling it taut and suturing it so that the cornea would heal while it was stretched out flat, Speaker was able to correct the complication and flatten May's wrinkled cornea. Following recovery, May's eye healed and he reports that his vision is currently near perfect.

Gregg Doane realized that something had gone awry following his LASIK surgery when he felt a searing pain in his left eye. Because Doane has naturally dry eyes and was suffering from blepharitis, inflammation of the eyelid, Doane's eye became inflamed causing the corneal flap to disintegrate and "melt." His surgeon attempted to rectify the situation, but the treatment did not stop the pain and the melting.

"For about eight days following the surgery, I went to see the doctor every other day," explains Doane. "I would receive a drop of anaesthetic in my eye, but the medication only provided about five minutes of relief from the pain." Ironically, the painkiller Doane's doctor was applying to his eye, was actually hindering the healing process.

When it became clear that his eye was not healing, Doane was directed to Dr. Speaker because of his reputation for repairing damaged corneas. To rectify the situation, Doane was put on steroids to reduce the inflammation in his eye, and Dr. Speaker lifted the corneal flap and removed the epithelial in-growth and debris. The pain subsided almost immediately, but Doane wore a contact lens bandage for over a month as his eye healed.

As a result of his experience, Doane urges LASIK candidates to be aware of the potential dangers of LASIK and to thoroughly research a surgeon before undergoing the procedure. Michael May does not regret undergoing LASIK and still recommends it to others. However, he cautions prospective LASIK patients to research their doctor and choose a surgeon who is experienced and trained to handle complications if they arise.

Dr. T.J. Calabrese, an optometrist who practices in Southampton, often refers patients considering LASIK to Dr. Speaker, and suggests thoroughly researching the surgeon before undergoing the procedure. Patients should look for a surgeon who has performed thousands of procedures over several years, and who willingly educates patients about the benefits and the risks of LASIK. Prospective patients should keep in mind that LASIK is safe and effective when performed by a skilled and qualified surgeon.

For more information about the LASIK procedure, call 1-888-CALL-TLC, or visit www.laskinyc.com.

About Face: Best Foot Forward

With the arrival of Spring, it is about time to begin thinking about those two appendages that have been enclosed all winter in socks, shoes and boots. There is no doubt in my mind that the absolute best exfoliator for them is walking along the beach barefoot. That seems to be out of the question though, with every other day bringing the threat of some sort of precipitation in one form or another. But if you are brave enough, go to it! The tiny grains of sand act as a gentle abrasive medium and it polishes the skin on the feet wonderfully. I am not sure if it's the salt water that does this or if it's just the sand or maybe even the combination, but it does work. Since I am sure that you aren't going to be brave enough to cart some back home, here is a product that will mimic the total effect. It is called Pedicure Essentials by Dr. Scholl's. It is a salt scrub for the feet as well as the legs.

Made with Dead Sea salts and oil and applied before a shower works wonders. It does contain olive oil so be very cautious getting in the shower. Make sure you have a non-slip mat in place to step on. If you use your hands to massage this great product in, you will be doing two things at once. It is wonderful for your hands also.

This time of year is the best time to start getting ready to for those pastel manicures both on the feet and your fingertips. Cetaphil makes a wonderful cream to apply to your feet and legs following your spa-like treatment. Be sure to get the cream and not the lotion. It lasts for a long time in keeping the skin moisturized as well as smooth. It is not specifically for feet and legs only but sure does work wonders on them! Use a cuticle cream and orange stick to gently push back the cuticle. Make sure that you remove all traces of oil and cream before you begin to apply your polishes. By putting a coat or two of a no chip polish on your toenails, you will be assured that it will not rub off easily. Shoewear and socks can buff the polish off. By starting now on your footcare regime, you will find it so much easier than having to work at it when the sandal season makes its debut!

EAST END FARMING WITH JOE GERGELA

The story continues. A third attempt at Ukrainian independence was equally unsuccessful. Ivan Mezeppa became hetman of the Cossacks in 1687. While ostensibly serving the Russian Czar, Peter I ("The Great") Mazeppa laid plans to unite the eastern and western parts of Ukraine. In 1708 Mazeppa concluded an alliance with King Charles XII of Sweden, who was waging war against Russia, designed to establish an independent Ukraine with himself as ruler. Unfortunately for Ukraine, Peter defeated Charles at the battle of Poltava in 1709. Mazeppa retreated into Turkey never to return. In 1793, Ukraine, with the exception of a small part of western Ukraine, was annexed by the Austro-Hungarian Empire, becoming part of the Russian Empire. Under Czarist Rule, Ukraine was Russified: all Ukrainian national aspirations suppressed. The name Ukraine actually disappeared. In the 1840's there was another move for independence but it was thwarted by Russia. Russian influence continued for the next 80 years. Ukraine signed an alliance treaty with Lenin. The alliance treaty in fact became an instrument of de facto subordination of Ukraine to the control of Moscow.

Ukraine became one of the founding members of the USSR (Soviet Socialist Republics) on December 30, 1922. The early years of Soviet rule were characterized by a period of Ukrainianization, a language act in 1923 making Ukrainian the official language. This relatively benign period came to an abrupt end with Stalin's rise to power in 1929. Ukraine paid a heavy price for Stalin's policies of collectivization and industrialization. The collectivization in the 1930's forced peasants to give up their land and move to collective state farms. That process had a devastating effect on agricultural exports by paying for the industrialization and expansion of the Soviet military. A dreadful famine in 1932-33 that took an estimated 10 million lives was used to destroy the peasants' will to resist collectivization and put an end to Ukrainian nationalism. The Soviets hold on Ukraine continued until a presidential election and referendum on Ukraine's independence declaration were held on December 1, 1991. Ukraine's independence was ratified by 90% of its voters. Today, the Ukrainian people are still trying to undo hundreds of years of oppression by Russian influence.

After my education in Zaporizhia, I spent the last 10 days of my visit in Prymorsk, the seaside agricultural/resort community on the Sea of Azov. Each day was spent with the Private Farmers Association leaders meeting with government officials, journalists and students. It also became a tradition for me to visit a different farm family daily. My friend Vloydimir, picked me up each morning at 8:30 and drove me to the farmers' homes. We usually spent five hours or so eating 5 course dinners, tasting some libations and talking about farming issues. I had brought an album of about 200 pictures of our farms, farmers and my family. The farmers and their families asked alot of questions about our farming practices, customs, culture and government policies. The Ukrainian farmers and their families are so much like our farmers here on Long Island. They are proud, fiercely independent, solid citizens who care deeply about their industry and their country. It was indeed an honor for me to be chosen to work with them to develop a strategic plan for their Private Farmers Association. They can and will figure out how to initiate change in Ukraine's government and public policy. It is going to take time, but their country's future hinges upon their success. By the end of my visit, they understood and were pleased with the plan we had devised to grow their organization. Since I have been back home, I've been staying in touch with the farmers through the CNFA office in Kiev. The organization is gaining both members and influence. Their "standing" with government and community is testament to the practical, common sense approach to life that farmers have as an inherent trait. I will continue to stay in touch with my Ukrainian friends and plan to return next year if possible. My visit to Ukraine is something I'll never forget.

I am writing this for all of us who have someone in our lives whom we love and would never want to see any harm come to. Love is a wonderful feeling, one of its benefits is it takes us away from otherwise insurmountable situations to plateaus of, "we can overcome this together".

Then there comes that dark cursed time we all dread, illness, which, with all the love in the world, is the most difficult test of that love. Do we lose faith, or do we draw from that love the strength we need to overcome even the worst situations? Our family has come to that point where we need to concentrate all our love and help one of our family members get through a dark time. Michael is my son-in-law and has been living with HVC for about ten years, that we know of. His condition was always taken very lightly because he always looked so good and was in otherwise top notch health. We all felt that with his monitoring of his diet he would live to be a hundred. Michael is the kind of guy everyone loves. He is never too busy to help anyone and always has a smile on his face. Such expressions as "mench", "he hasn't got a bad bone in his body" and many other similar phrases have been used to describe Michael. I am sure some of you had the pleasure of having Michael do a drapery or shade installation in your homes, in which case you know exactly what I mean. This past winter reality set in big time. One morning Michael went to work to do his drapery installations out in the Hamptons and on the way out he started coughing up blood. He returned home where the situation worsened, he was bleeding profusely. Michael was rushed to Stony Brook hospital where the doctors were at a loss. It was a nightmare, the weekend, with no specialists on staff and a relatively new disease which few specialists can even understand fully. It was determined that Michael's portal vein had burst due to the fact that the liver could no longer handle the amount of blood that it had to process. Michael's liver was obviously a lot more damaged than had been suspected. A new procedure for the liver, called a stint, seemed the only way to neutralize this situation. The problem now was that none of the staff at Stony brook had ever done this procedure and it is quite complicated. A stint, in as simple terms as I understand it, is a metal tube attached to the vein and inserted through the liver to relieve the pressure, hopefully stopping the portal vein from bleeding. Fortunately Michael's wife knew of such a surgeon and she called him, thank God he was home, and he rushed to the hospital to set up the procedure. Michael was saved and has been put on a liver transplant list. Anyone familiar with transplant lists must know that it is extremely difficult. There is an excellent chance that a partial liver transplant will increase Michael's chances. The liver is an organ that can regenerate itself. A doner can regenerate the piece that is donated and the recipient can grow more healthy liver tissue from the piece donated. The match is the key. Body weight has to be similar, blood type, and general health. I implore anyone who would be willing to share his or her love for life for Michael to please call Nora at 631-286-4690.

POLICE BLOTTER

In a sort of domino effect, a motorist in Montauk, while backing into a driveway, hit and ran over a tree, then struck a metal dumpster which in turn was knocked into a wooden barn. The barn sustained some damage..

* * *

Two Long Island Rail Road conductors discovered an unauthorized individual making use of the LIRR building on Edgemere Rd. in Montauk. They told police that when they arrived at the building they saw the lock broken and inside was a man on the couch, in a sleeping bag, watching TV. When police arrived the person in question was still there; possibly his program had not ended. The police, however, terminated his TV viewing, as he was taken into custody.

* * *

An East Hampton man is missing his stones. He told police he had a pile of bluestone at the end of his driveway, which had been stolen.

* * *

This goes beyond Goldilocks crimes. A woman in East Hampton reported to police that someone came into her unlocked house—and cleaned it. Yes, the unknown fastidious person attended to the dishes and generally straightened up. It is theorized that this might have been done by a maid who had come to the wrong address. Undoubtedly a number of local residents would welcome such visits. At any rate, will the complainant get a bill?

* * *

Pots pilfered on St. Patrick's Day? Well, in Montauk, if it was not exactly the day of the saint, it was the day of the parade, and Robert Devlin of the West Lake Clam and Chowder House told police that pots he was to use to cook for the parade were missing.

* * *

A Hampton Bays man perhaps geared up for the baseball season in an unfortunate manner. Responding to a domestic dispute, police found a female relative with a baseball bat. Even after the officers arrived the gentleman would not let go of the bat and police were forced to struggle with the man to disarm him. He was charged not only with menacing and resisting arrest, but with possessing a quantity of crack cocaine.

* * *

Westhampton, Quiogue and Speonk have been reporting a rash of vandalism caused by BB or pellet guns. Six complaints have been registered in this area. Suffolk County police have also received similar reports from Eastport and the Moriches. The majority of the damage has been the shooting out of windows—from houses, stores and cars.

* * *

In East Hampton, a woman told police that after stopping at an intersection and checking traffic in both directions, she began to make a right turn and suddenly struck a bicyclist who was on the wrong side of the road.

A student at Pierson High School in Sag Harbor had his jaw broken by another student of that school; allegedly the attacker was punishing the student for cooperating with the police in the investigation of a drug sale at the school.

Dan's LETTERS

TIRED OF LIBERAL MEDIA
Dear Dan,

Go scratch!!! Did our new president really say that? Sounds like my kind of guy!!! That's a hell of a lot better than luring a young intern into a closet off the Oval Office, putting a cigar into her private parts and yelling "go, baby."

I don't want to go off on a rant here, but look, Rattiner, just in case you haven't noticed, sainthood inside the Beltway, not unlike virginity, is deader than Kelsey's nuts.

It's time for you liberals to at least start thinking about getting a life. America is tired of the liberal media. Maybe you will start coming around near the end of the millennium, just about the time the next Democrat has a chance of winning the White House.

Long Island Dogs Need A Home

What does a nine-year-old boxer mix have in common with an eight-year-old black Lab? Friendship, that's what. Rocky and Daphne are being booted out of the only home they have ever known, so it would be too much to separate those good buddies.

That's why Rocky's Fund Dog Rescue, Southampton, has issued a desperate dog plea for a "forever home" for the two of them – Rocky and Daphne, destined soon to join the legions of the homeless because of extenuating circumstances in their owner's life. They are up to date on shots and have been spayed and neutered. They're past that troublesome puppy stage. They're just two good dogs who would like to stay together and maybe have a nice fenced in yard to run around in.

"Rocky is a real couch potato," says their owner, "and Daphne loves him. They are good with older kids, and they also love senior citizens."

Not jus anyone will do for these dear pooches. Rocky and Daphne's prospective adopters will be screened, must undergo home visit and must sign an adoption contract. Another plus: "Once these dogs find a new home, it must be forever," says Mindy Washington of Rocky's Fund Dog Rescue.

Soon Rocky and Daphne's plight will go nationwide because Rocky's Fund Dog Rescue/Welcome Home Sanctuary has recently joined Petfinder.com, the largest and oldest virtual animal shelter on the Internet. Members have their own home pages on Petfinder.com, and each animal in the shelter or rescue group has its own page, featuring its picture and description. The service is free both to adopters and shelters, thanks to Ralston Purina Company and The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals (ASPCA).

But just maybe, if the stars are right, Rocky and Daphne's plight won't be zapped into cyberspace. Maybe right now, someone is opening his or her heart to rescue them. If that someone is you, call Rocky's Fund dog Rescue/Welcome Home Sanctuary at 631-287-5428 or visit them on the web at http://www.petfinder.org/shelters/NY214.html. –Maria Tennariello
